REPORT OF THE PALI TEXT SOCIETY FOR THE YEAR 1909

THE work of the Society has gone steadily on during the past year. We have brought out the remainder of vol i. of the Dhammapada Commentary by Professor Norman, including his introduction to that interesting work. I am glad to see that he practically endorses the opinion I expressed long ago that it is not by Buddhaghosa. An absolutely final decision can only be given when we are able to answer the question : 'Is the vocabulary of its author different, and if so, how far different from that of Buddhaghosa?' And to answer that question we want more texts and a better dictionary.

The greater part of this Journal, the other issue for the year, is occupied, it will be seen, with work preparatory to the Society's dictionary. Next year's issues will be the third volume of the Dīgha, and an index to the five volumes of the Anguttara. Similar indices to the Dīgha and Majjhima are already being arranged for, and it is hoped to publish, in succession, indices of a similar kind to all the canonical texts. Such indices are really indispensable as preliminary work for the complete dictionary we hope eventually to have, and they will be a constant help to the much needed critical study of the texts themselves.

Of course we want other indices. We ought to have, not only indices to all important words in each text, but to each important subject in all the texts. But we cannot keep the dictionary waiting for all or any of these valuable indices. That would mean postponing it to the Greek Kalends. Now a DICTIONARY IS URGENTLY WANTED AT ONCE. We have sufficient funds in hand to pay for one twice the length (and probably about ten times as good) as Childers's. The only sensible thing to do is to face the facts of this particular case, and to set to work to do what we can.

And the position we have to face, so far from being beset with difficulties, is really full of hope, and affords no excuse at all for delay. The St. Petersburg dictionary was started in 1850. With no trouble at all about money, with two distinguished scholars able to devote their lives to the work, and others ready and able to help, it was 1875 before the last of its stately folios saw the light. We have reasonable expectation of being able to do not only as well, but better than that—that is to say, that in less than twenty-five years we shall have published not only a working dictionary at once, but also, after that, a second enlarged dictionary, as good in every respect for canonical and later Pali as Böthlingk-Roth is for Vedic and Sanskrit.

The first steps are conditioned by the finance. There are not sufficient funds to pay anyone to devote his whole time to the work, and each of the Pali scholars in Europe has to give the main part of his time to other work. It is impossible therefore to follow the method of the St. Petersburg lexicon, which we should otherwise have wished to do. This difficulty has, however, been overcome by a sufficient number of competent scholars having undertaken to write the dictionary articles for all words beginning with a certain letter or letters. The names of these co-workers are ample guarantee for the scholarship of the work, and sufficient uniformity for all practical purposes is insured by the co-workers having agreed to the observance of certain simple rules.

The size of the work is again determined by the finance. We have enough to pay for twice as much matter as is contained in Childers's. And in this connection I have the pleasure of announcing that the Bavarian Academy has set aside this year, from the Hardy fund, the sum of £37 10s. for the dictionary, in which the donor of the fund took so much interest. Professor Hardy had undertaken, when he died, to do the vowels and to act as sub-editor. I am very glad to say that Professor Ernst Kuhn has stepped into the breach created by the lamented death of Hardy. Had Hardy lived, the first instalment of the dictionary would have been out by now; and we may hope that Professor Kuhn will soon put an end to the delay that has resulted from the unexpected and irreparable loss that we sustained.

The dictionary will appear in four volumes of about 250 pages each, the authorship of each being as follows:

Vol. I.: Vowels. Professor Kuhn.

Vol. II.: K—N. Professor Windisch with Professor Duroiselle (K—GH) and Dr. Rouse (C—JH) as co-workers.

Vol. III.: P—M. Professor Geiger with Dr. Bode. (B—M) as co-worker.

Vol. IV.: Y—H. Professor Andersen with Dr. Sten Konow (S and H) as co-worker.

The produce of the sales will be placed on deposit in the bank. The necessary vorarbeiten for a Second Edition, at least twice as large as the working dictionary, to be published at once, will be pushed forward as fast as the funds of the Society allow. By the time that these preliminary studies are sufficiently advanced to render the preparation of this Second Edition advisable, there will be enough funds in hand, if not to pay the whole cost, still enough to make it comparatively easy to raise the rest of the amount required. By that time we shall have the Visuddhi Magga and other works of Buddhaghosa before us, and probably the rest of Dhammapāla; we shall have learnt to distinguish somewhat between the gradual changes in the connotation of words; and shall perhaps have got to know something about the history of the language and of the ideas expressed in it.

Meanwhile we shall have had, for ten years or so, a good working dictionary to use. Nine-tenths of the texts now accessible to scholars have been published since Childers's, and it is quite unnecessary to discuss the probability of the particular degree of improvement that we reasonably hope to show, even in this First Edition. The plan, therefore, imposed upon us by the necessities of finance has, in point of fact, great advantages. To attempt a perfect dictionary would, in any case, be quite foolish in the present state of our studies. The plan adopted is not only the only feasible one, but it will at the same time provide us with the help we want for the next ten years, and also the funds for a better and more complete dictionary just at the time when it would be wise to undertake it. The important point is to get the First Edition out quickly, so that those funds may begin to accumulate as soon as possible.

Finally—besides this new edition of Childers's, which is to be preparatory to a really satisfactory Pali dictionary—it is contemplated also, before very long, to publish a short dictionary, without references, for the use of students. The Society hopes in this undertaking to have the assistance of Professor Duroiselle of Rangoon.

LEXICOGRAPHY

WORDS BEGINNING WITH S

By DR. STEN KONOW

REVISED AND ENLARGED

By PROFESSOR DINES ANDERSON*

Sa 1. The letter s (sa-kāra, m. Kacc. 37).

2. A prefix used as first part of compound adjectives and adverbs, in the sense of with, common to, same as sadevaka, V. i. 8 (with the devas); sadhammin (having similar faith); sajāti, J. A. ii, 108²³ (having the same origin). Often opposed to a- and other negative prefixes, sometimes nearly pleonastical; sa-kūbbato (opp. to a-kubbato), Dhp. v. 52 (51); cf. sace (opp. noce), see sa 4, below.

3. The numeral one in sakirñ, sadā, etc.

4. The base of a demonstrative pronoun, that, he, she. The nominative sing. masc. is sa. Dhp. 142, S. N. 89; or so, V. i. 5; nom. sing. fem. sā, V. i. 5. The final o of so is often changed into v before a vowel, and a short vowel is lengthened after this v; thus svājja, S. N. 998, instead of so ajja; svāham, J. A. i. 167⁹ instead of so aham; svāssa instead of so assa; svāyam, V. i. 2; Sum. i. 37 instead of so ayam; seva instead of so eva. The following vowel is dropped in so mam: It. 57 for so imam. The base sa also occurs in sace, seyyathā, which see. It is used as affirmative particle (indecl.); sa kho so bhikkhu, M. i. 37; D. i. 63.

Other cases are formed from the base ta, which see.

The base in compounds is tad, e.g. tadabhimukha, Dhp. A. 88 (before him), or sometimes tam, e.g. tankhaṇe, Dāth. iv. 31 (at that time).

Tam, tad is used as an adverb meaning there, then,

* Some words of philosophical or psychological import have been treated by Mrs. Rhys Davids.

therefore ; thus, yena Uravelā tad avasari, V. i. 27 ; tam sunātha, D. ii. 76 (listen then) ; yathā tam, It. 99 ; Sum. i. 37 (as, like) ; tam yathā, as follows, namely.

Some case-forms are used as adverbs ; thus, tasmā and tasmā hi, therefore ; tasmā ti ha, therefore ; tena and tena hi, therefore, then.

The base ta is often replaced by na ; thus, nam, V. i. 25 ; J. A. iv. 171¹² ; namhā ; ne, V. i. 21 ; nesam, V. i. 19 ; nehi, J. A. iv. 22²⁵, etc.

5. According to Buddhaghosa on M. i. 9²⁸ abbreviated from assa. At S. N. 1111. Trenckner reads : evam 'sa tassa carato, sa used pleonastically (see § 4 at the end).

6. (sva) own M. i. 366, D. ii. 209 ; S. N. 905 ; J. ii. 7²⁷, iii. 164¹⁴ ; V. V. lxxxiv. 52. Frequently used in composition ; thus, sadesa, Dāth. i. 10 (own country) ; sanāmena in his own name. By confusion with sa 1 (= saha) we have instr. sa-ñātihi (together with my relatives), B. v. 16 ; sa refers also to the 1st and 2nd person.

7. = cha (sa. ṣas, ṣad) only in compounds, by sandhi also so-, sal-, see sāha (J. A. i. 168¹⁵ ; vi. 80⁷), solasa, salāyatana.

sa-Inda (sendra), together with Indra, D. ii. 261, 274.

sa-uttara, having something beyond ; inferior, D. i. 80⁹ ; ii. 299 = M. i. 59 ; Dh. S. 1292, 1596 ; Asl. 50.

sa-uttaracchada, n., a carpet with awnings above it, D. i. 7¹², etc. ; A. i. 181²⁴ ; V. i. 192¹⁰ ; ii. 163²⁵.

sa-uttaracchadana, n., the same as the foregoing, D. ii. 187 ; Sum. i. 87.

sa-uttaribhaṅga, together with dainty bits, J. A. i. 186¹⁰.

sa-udaka, with water, wet, V. i. 46.

sa-udariya (sodarya), born from the same womb, uterine brother, J. iv. 417¹⁹ (cf. sodariya).

sa-uddesa (soddeśa), with explanation, It. 99.

sa-upavajja, having a helper, M. iii. 266³⁰.

sa-upādāna, with attachment, M. ii. 265⁴.

sa-upādisesa, having the skandhas remaining, S. N. 354 ; It. 38⁶ ; Nett. 92²³ ; Abh. S. vi. 14.

sa-ummi and sa-ūmi (sormi), together with the waves,
It. 57¹²; 114⁴.

saīm (sam), prefix implying ‘conjunction, completeness,’ etc.,
Abhidhānap. 1170, Payogasiddhi ii.

sañyata and saññata (sañyata), tied, fastened; restrained, self-controlled, D. ii. 88; S. i. 79¹⁸; S. N. 88, 156, 716; Dhp. 24, 362; J. i. 188¹¹; Mil. 213⁶.

sañyatattā (-ātman), having one’s self restrained, S. N. 723; 216; 284 (saññat°).

sañyatacārin, living in self-control, Dhp. 104 (saññata°).

sañyatapakhuma (-pakṣman), having the eyelashes close together, V. V. A. 162²⁷.

sañyatāru (-oru). having the thighs pressed together, having firm thighs. J. v. 89²¹; 155¹⁹ (saññat°).

sañyattika, m. (sāñyātrika), a sea-trader.

sañyam, I., to practise self-control, S. i. 209²⁷; saññame
(caus.), to restrain, Dhp. 37; saññāme° (caus.), do.,
Dhp. 380 (imper. saññāmaya).

I. sañyama and saññama, m. (sañ°), restraint, self-control, 154.
abstinence, S. i. 21²⁵; 169³²; D. i. 53¹; V. i. 3²⁸;
It. 15²¹ (saññama); S. N. 264; 655; Sum. i. 160.

II. Sañyama, name of a king in Benares, J. A. v. 354 (various reading), 374²⁴.

sañyamana, n., fastening, J. v. 202²³.

sañyamanī, f., a kind of ornament, J. v. 202²⁴ (saññamanī).

sañyācikā, f., the begging together of materials, Pāt. Sangh.
6 = V. iii. 149 ff., J. A. ii. 282¹⁷, 283¹ (read sañyācikāya instead of sañyācikāyo or saññācikāyo).

sañyuga, n. (1) Union; harness, Thag. 659. (2) Strife.

sañyuj, to unite. sañyujjanti (pr. pass.), S. iii. 70¹¹;
sañyoje (caus.), to put together, endow with, D. ii. 355;
S. v. 354²; caus., J. A. i. 277²⁵; sañyojita (p.p.p.), J. A.
i. 269²⁴; to wed one to (instr.), J. A. iii. 512²⁵; iv. 7¹⁵.

sañyuta, connected, combined, S. N. 574 (saññuta), 1026.

I. sañyutta (-yukta), joined, connected, tied, S. iv. 163;
S. N. 194 (saññutta), 300, 304; It. 8¹⁸; Saddham-mopāyana 211.

II. sañyutta (yukta), a section of the scriptures, V. ii. 306³⁵; especially the groups of suttas contained in the Samyutta Nikāya, S. i. 1, etc.; J. A. ii. 58²⁵.

samyouttaṭṭhakathā, f., the Commentary (Sāratthapakāsinī) on the S., J. A. v. 38⁴.

samyouttanikāya, m., one of the divisions of the Sutta Pitaka, Mil. 137¹⁷; Sum. i. 15⁸; G. V. 56; Sās. 73⁵; 148²²; Mahābodhiv. 94 f.

samyoutta-bhāṇaka, m., a repeater of the S., Mil. 342¹.

sañyūlha and saññūlha (samūḍha), uttered, recited, D. ii. 267¹⁹; M. i. 386³³ (saññūlha); sañvūlha, Sum. i. 38.

samyojana, m., union, association; conjunction; intercourse; bond, fetter, V. ii. 258³²; M. i. 498¹⁵; S. i. 226⁴; iii. 70¹¹, 143¹⁰; iv. 36⁷; S. N. 522, 733; J. A. iii. 12⁵ (saññoga).

samyojana, n., bond, fetter, S. iv. 163, etc.; especially the fetters that bind man to the wheel of rebirth, A. i. 264; M. i. 483; S. i. 23; V. i. 183; It. 8, 18; S. N. 62, 74, 621; Nett. 49; Dhp. 31, 221, 342; J. i. 275¹⁸; ii. 22²⁶.

The ten fetters are (1) sakkāyaditthi; (2) vicikicchā; (3) sīlabbataparāmāso; (4) kāmacchando; (5) byāpādo; (6) rūparāgo; (7) arūparāgo; (8) māno; (9) uddhaccamī; (10) avijjā. The first three ones are the tīṇi samyojanāni—e.g., M. i. 9; A. i. 231, 233; D. i. 156; ii. 92 f., 252; S. v. 357; 376; 406; P. P. 12, 15; Nett. 14; Dh. S. 1002; Sum. i. 312. The seven last are the satta samyojanāni, Nett. 14. The first five ones are called orambhāgīyāni—e.g., A. i. 232 f.; ii. 5, 133; v. 17; D. i. 156; ii. 92, 252; M. i. 432; S. v. 61, 69; Thig. 165. The last five are called uddhambhāgīyāni—e.g., A. v. 17; S. v. 61, 69; Thig. 167; Thig. A. 159; Dhp. A. 421.

A different enumeration of the ten samyojanas, Dh. S. 1113, 1463 (kāmarāga, paṭigha, māna, ditthi, vicikicchā, sīlabbataparāmāsa, bhararāga, issā, macchariyā, avijjā); compare, however, Dh. S. 1002. Both lists are given in Abh. S. vii. 1, the first as belonging to the Suttantas, the second as belonging to the Abhidhamma. Issā and macchariyā are, however, called saṃyojanas in D. ii. 276.

Different enumerations of seven saṃyojanas, A. iv. 7 and 8, cf. i. 223.

A list of eight saṃyojanas, M. i. 361 ff.

Compare also ajjhattasaṃyojano and bahiddhā-saṃyojano puggalo, A. i. 63 f.; P. P. 22; kirū-su-saṃyojano, S. i. 39 = S. N. 1108.

saṃyojaniya (saññojaniya), connected with the saṃyojanas, favourable to the saṃyojanas, A. i. 50; S. ii. 86; iii. 166 f.; iv. 89, 107; Dh. S. 584, 1125, 1462; Asl. 49. Used as a noun, with dhammā understood, S. N. 363, 375.

saṃrakkhaṇa (-rakṣana), n., preservation.

saṃrambha, m., impetuosity, rage, Dāth. iv. 34; compare sārambha.

saṃrahita, devoid of, Dhp. A. 111.

Sakkara, n., a township among the Sākyas, S. i. 87 = v. 2.

Sakkasamyutta, the 11th Saṁyutta of the Sagātha Vagga of the Saṁyutta Nikāya (S. i. 216 ff.).

sakkā (śakyāt), originally the third person singular of the optative of sak, to be able—e.g., na so sakkā na hetuye, it could not be, it must necessarily be, J. i. 4¹; sakkā sāmaññaphalaṁ paññāpetuṁ, would one be able to point out a result of samañaship, D. i. 51; khāditum na sakkā, one could not eat, J. A. ii. 16²². The last instance shows how sakkā has become an indeclinable word, meaning impossible, unable. It is then often combined with an infinitive with a passive meaning, and a verb substantive can be added; na sakkā maggo akkhātum, the way cannot be shown, Mil. 269; sakkā etam mayā nātum? can I ascertain this? D. i. 187: na sakkā puññam samkhātum im' ettam api kenaci, the merit cannot be measured by anybody, Dhp. 196; sakkā honti imāni atṭha sukhāni vinditum, these eight advantages are able to be enjoyed, J. A. i. 8¹; sakkā etam abhavissa kātum, this would be possible to do, D. i. 168. (The above explanation follows Pischel, 'Grammatik der Prakrit-Sprachen,' § 465; but see contra Andersen, 'Pali Reader,' p. 248.)

sakkāya, m. (svakāya), lit. one's own body; as a technical term of Bt psychology nearly equal to individuality; identified with the five khandhas, M. i. 299; S. iii. 159; iv. 259; Thig. A. 170, 239; Asl. 348; usually found in the compound s°ditthi, speculation as to the eternity or otherwise of one's own individuality, M. i. 300 = iii. 17 = Dh. S. 1003, S. iii. 16 foll. In these passages this is explained as the belief that in one or other of the khandhas there is a permanent entity, an attā. The same explanation, at greater length, in the Dīthigata Sutta (Paṭis. i. 143-151). As delusions about the soul or ghost can arise out of four sorts of bias (see abhiniveso) concerning each of the five khandhas, we have twenty kinds of s°ditthi: fifteen of these are kinds of sakkāya-ratthukā sassata-ditthi, and five are kinds of s°-ratthukā uccheda-ditthi (ibid. 149, 150). Gods as well as men are s°pariyāpannā, S. iii. 85; and so is the eye, Asl. 308. When the word ditthi is not expressed it is often implied, Th. ii. 199, 339; S. N. 231. S°ditthi is the first Bond to be broken on entering the Path (see saṃyojana); it is identical with the fourth kind of Grasping (see upādāna); it is opposed to Nibbāna, S. iv. 175; is extinguished by the Path, M. i. 299; S. iii. 159; iv. 260; and is to be put away by insight, Asl. 346. Sakkāya is defined M. i. 300; iii. 17; and the derivation is discussed by Buddhaghosa in Asl. 348; Childers, s.v., Ed. Müller, P. G. 19; Senart in ‘Mélanges Harlez,’ 291 f. (satkārya).

sakkāra (satkāra), m., hospitality, honour, worship, A. ii. 203; Dh. S. 1121; J. A. i. 63²⁷, ii. 9²²; 104²⁵; Dhp. 75; V. i. 27, 183.

sakkhali and sakkhalikā, f. (sa. śaskult; sometimes confounded with saṅkhali=sa. śrṅkhalā, a chain)=(1) the orifice of the ear (or earlap [?]); kanyā-^o, Dhp. A., p. 148²⁵; J. A. v. 438²⁷, Asl. 334 (in these two last passages it can hardly mean ‘a box on the ear.’ This explanation is very seductive, but can kanyā-sakkhaliyam (loc.) or ^o-ikam (acc.) paharati mean ‘to give a box on the ear.’ If the phrase had this signification, we should expect the verb deti and not paharati, which is literally ‘to hand, or to hand a blow=to strike’ (with acc. or loc.), and how should it be understood that the wind (vāta) gives a box on the ear? Asl. 334; (2) a sort of cake or sweetmeat, A. iii. 76 (var. lect. sakkhalikā and saṅkulikā); pūva-^o, J. A. ii. 281²³, V. iii. 59.

saṅkhāyaka, m., a calculator, S. iv. 376.

saṅkhāra (samiskāra), m., confection, composition, compound, combination, complex, synthesis, aggregate, -ion:

(1) All things which have been brought together, made up, by pre-existing causes, forms, the world of phenomena, S. ii. 193; Dhp. 255, 278.

(2) Aggregate of the conditions or essential properties for a given process or result—e.g. (i.) the sum of the conditions or properties making up or resulting in life or existence: āyusaṅkhāra, D. ii. 106; S. ii. 266; bhavasaṅkhāra, jīvitasaṅkhāra, D. ii. 99, 107. (ii.) Essential conditions, antecedents or synergy (co-ordinated activity), requisite for act, speech, thought: kāyas., racīs., cittas., or manos., described respectively as ‘respiration,’ ‘attention and consideration,’ ‘percepts and feelings,’ ‘because these are (respectively) bound up with,’ or ‘precede’ those, M. i. 301 (cf. 56); S. iv. 293.

(3) One of the five khandhas, or aggregates of the constituents of organic life (see khandha), comprising all the citta-sampayutta-cetasikā dhammā—i.e., the mental concomitants, or adjuncts, which come, or tend to come, into consciousness at the uprising of a citta, or unit of cognition, Dhs. 1 (cf. M. iii. 25); Abh. S. ch. ii. As thus classified, the saṅkhāra's form the mental factor corresponding to the bodily aggregate, or rūpakkhandha, and are in contrast to the three khandhas representing a single mental function only. But just as kāya stands for both body and action, so do the concrete mental syntheses called saṅkhāra tend to take on the implication of synergies, of purposive intellection, connoted by the term abhisāṅkhāra, q.v.—e.g., M. iii. 99 f., where saṅkhārā are a purposive, aspiring state of mind to induce a specific rebirth; S. ii. 82, where puññam, apuññam, āneñjanī s. abhisāṅkharoti, is, in Vibh. 135, catalogued as the three classes of abhisāṅkhāra; S. ii. 39, 360; A. ii. 157, where s. is tantamount to sañcetanā; Mil. 61, where s., as khandha, is replaced by cetanā (purposive conception). Thus, too, the ss. in the Paṭiccasamuppāda formula are considered as the aggregate of mental conditions which, under the law of kamma, bring about the inception of the paṭisandhi-viññāna, or first stirring of mental life in a newly begun individual. Lists of the psychologically, or logically distinguishable factors making up the composite saṅkhārakkhandha, with constants and variants, are given for each class of citta in Dh. S. 62, etc. (N.B.—Read cetanā for vedanā, § 338.) Phassa and cetanā are the two constant factors in the s-khandha. These lists may be compared with the later elaboration of the saṅkhāra-elements given in Vis. Mag., ch. xiv. (J. P. T. S., 1891-93, 131).

Saṅkhārabhājanīyasutta, n., name of a Sutta included in the Vedalla, G. V. 57.

S., 1889, 211; probably a form from the root bhr, of which intens. redupl. forms like jarbhari and jarbhṛta occur in RV; the first of these would in Pali become exactly jambhari. The development of signification I don't venture to explain exactly, but I think that saṃjambharīm karoti (with a second acc.) would mean 'to overwhelm with [harsh and bitter talk]'. Jambhari is probably adj. (and subst.) = overloaded (and beast of burden?), and this would agree with Nirukta, quoted by Sāyana, Ed. of M. Müller, RV 10, 106 v. 6 (vol. vi., p. 350).

saṁthāna (saṁsthāna), n., configuration, nature, M. i. 120; cf. saṁthāna. At. M. i. 481⁷ = S. ii. 28 (2 fr. b.), it seems to be used in the sense of 'end, stopping, cessation' (cf. sanskr.) = A. iv. 190 (the editions of S. and A. have saṁthāna). At J. A. vi. 113⁹ it is translated by 'market-place,' the comp. saṁthāna-gata being explained by the Comm. by saṁthāna mariyādāni gatā, but at J. A. vi. 360⁸ saṁthāna-gata is by the English translator translated 'a wealthy man' (vinicchaye thito, Comm.). In both places there is also the var. lect. saṁthāna-^o. Would it mean a man of high position or rank? and would saṁthāna then mean 'position'?

N. 65; sapadānacārika, the same, Vin. iii. 15; sapadānacārikā, f., wandering from house to house. J. A. i. 89⁹. [Derivation uncertain. Used only of the method followed by the Bhikkhus when passing for alms through a village. It is used of a bird (J. A. v. 358¹²), and of a lion (Mil. 400¹⁹); but as the context shows that the animals are acting like samanas, these instances only follow the usage of the canon law, and are not independent of it. The word is not used of non-Buddhists, though their methods are described in great detail (D. i. 165 ff.). Buddhaghosa (Vis. M., quoted by Childers) derives it from sa+apadāna, and explains it in the passages quoted at Vinaya Texts, i. 63. Weber (Ind. Str. iii. 398) suggests sapadā+nam, sapadā being an instr. by-form of sapadā, and nam an enclitic. Trenckner (Mil., p. 428) says sapadi+ayana. Both these are impossible, as sapadi itself is not traced till many centuries after sapadāna was in common use. The same objection rules out sa+pradāna, though, as Windisch (M. und B., 247) shows, that can be made to fit the meaning.]

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

SCARCELY any story is so widely distributed in Indian literature as that of Kalmāṣapāda, that curious tale of a cannibal king with ‘spotted feet’ (kalmāṣapāda), who was doomed to devour many human beings through a sage’s curse.

The Mahābhārata tells this story in full detail. It is also described in both the famous Purāṇas, Vishṇu, and Bhāgavata, familiar to European scholars through the translations of those two great pioneers of Oriental learning—H. H. Wilson and Eugène Burnouf.

The Buddhists made this king a predominant figure in the Jātakas and Avadānas. In the Pāli collection of the birth-stories his conversion is depicted in romantic colours.

In the various Avadānas preserved in the Chinese Tripitaka, the king appears more frequently, and with more varied features than in the Pāli literature. Later Buddhist writers of popular works in China and Japan took the king as the type of an Oriental Nero. Nor is he absent from Jain literature. Finally, it is an important and interesting fact that we can trace this story so far back as the Vedic age. Vestiges are found not only in many commentaries, but even in the R̥gveda itself.

Thus the story, commencing with the Vedic age, reaches to the later time of the Purāṇas, with various tendencies and features, representing the literatures of different periods.

It was common property to the poets of Brahmanism, Buddhism, Hinduism, and Jainism. A study of the legend, therefore, is by no means without significance for inquiries into Indian literature. But it is curious how, in spite of its importance, it has escaped the eyes of investigators of the Mahābhārata and Jātakas, except only for a few remarks of limited scope made by Professors Holtzmann and Speyer, the late great Wilson and Dr. Muir.

The little article here published attempts to supply this want, and tries to show how great is the significance of a study, through which many questions on the Epics and Jātakas may find elucidation.

I am, of course, here making no claim for my inquiry, either of ultimate validity or of exhaustive treatment, for many other things still remain awaiting further investigations. But at least I hope that the reader will acknowledge the importance of a comparative and systematic study of a story like this, even through my imperfect treatment of the subject.

For the publication of this article I am deeply grateful to Professor Rhys Davids, who encouraged me to let my work appear in this journal. I am also very much indebted to the kind offer of Mrs. Rhys Davids to read through my manuscript.

To my teacher and friend, Professor Leumann, I am especially grateful for his generous help in giving me important materials together with useful advice.

My thanks are, further, due to the kindness of Dr. Sakaki and Dr. Walleser for lending me copies of some passages from Laikāvatāra. Dr. Walleser gave me also several important suggestions from the Tibetan sources.

Besides these texts, Kalmāṣapāda is included in a list of Yakṣas in the Mahāmāyūrī-vidyārājñī, as a tutelary demon of the people Vairyā.¹

2. Classification of the Texts.—If the contents of the texts above given are carefully compared, a noticeable mark of difference is soon discovered. This relates to a prelude in the story, in which the mysterious birth of Kalmāṣapāda by a lioness is described. Some texts omit this prelude, while in others this introduction forms one of the most important points. Thus it may be natural to divide all the texts into two great groups according to these distinguishing marks. Those which have not this prelude are grouped under the first, and those which have it belong to the second.²

Under the first group a subdivision is made to distinguish two forms from the moral teachings which form the central point of the story. Some of them teach a single moral maxim only. In others, however, two or more moral lessons are given, with the occasional addition of a few dogmatical explanations. We may further divide the second form into two versions: the Sanskrit and the Pāli.

Another dichotomy is applied in the second group. The first is characterized by answering a question: Why had Kalmāṣapāda received such a curious name? The lioness story is therefore introduced as an a priori reason. The second, beside that etymological explanation, solves yet another question: Why did the king become cannibal? A curse story is told here, as an a posteriori solution.

1. THE FIRST FORM.

3. Text 10, Older Samyuktāvadāna.—This old Jātaka collection consists of sixty-four short chapters of various stories and allegories. Our text is found under No. 39. The text runs literally as follows :

‘Once in remote ages there was a Brahmin, who begged a king to give him something. The king was about to go hunting, and therefore made the Brahmin wait till his return to the palace. Stalking his game and getting separated from his followers, the king entered a deep valley, where he met with a Rāksasa waiting to devour him. The king said : “Listen ! This morning I have met with a Brahmin, to whom I have promised something on my return. I will first give him alms and then come back here as thy victim.” The Rāksasa said : “I wish to devour thee now. Wilt thou certainly come here again ?” The king answered : “Were I not true to my word, I should have forgotten the Brahmin." The Rākṣasa allowed him to go free. So the king returned to his palace, gave liberal alms to the Brahmin, and delivered over his kingdom to his successor. Then he came back again to the Rākṣasa, who was deeply moved by his faithfulness, paid great homage to him, and gave up the intention of devouring him.'

The names of the king and the Rākṣasa are here not given.

None of those episodes in the later texts—as, for example, the captivity of ninety-nine kings—is found here. The text is composed only of the central and essential point of the story, around which different factors were gradually added. This evidently shows the text to be the simplest and primitive form of all Kalmāṣapāda legends.

4. Text 13, Saṅgharakṣa-samuccaya.—Saṅgharakṣa, the author of the text, was, according to an introduction of the translator, a native of Surāṭha, and honoured by the famous king Kaniṣka as his teacher.¹ Three works composed by him are still extant.² Our text treats of the former births of the Buddha, with various examples, which praise his excellent virtues. Some dogmatical treatment is added thereto. The text describes the legend of the King Aśoka.³

The Kalmāṣapāda story in the text is mainly the same as that in the last text, except that the description is more detailed and complete. Here the names of the hero and his antagonist are mentioned.

'Thus I have also heard : In the ancient time there was a king named Sutasoma.⁴ . . . Once he was going to a pond in order to bathe, driving in a carriage adorned with rare plumage. As he was passing the city-gate, a Brahmin with a grave face, being intelligent and wise, came to beg money.

² N., nos. 1325, 1326, 1350.

³ Fasc. 3 (T.E. XXIV. f., 120a et seq.).

⁴ The Chinese Su-da-ma is apparently an abridged transliteration of Sutasoma. Or we may take Sudama for Sudāma, which seems to have some connection with the Vedic Sudās.

. . . At that time a winged demon with the name of Kalmāṣapāda,¹ showing his fearful form, carried off the king. The king then shed tears. Considering what the king was thinking, the demon asked : "O great king, why do you weep and cry ? Why are you so sorrowful and distressed?" The Bodhisattva answered : "I have no care for my body, but I have promised a Brahmin to give money. On that account I am sorrowful and distressed. . . ." The rest of the story is substantially the same as in the last text. At the end of the story three stanzas are recited by the demon-king to praise the noble character of Sutasoma.

5. Text 15, Mahāprajñāpāramitā-sāstra.—This voluminous commentary on the Pañcavimśatisāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā² is said to be the work of the famous Mahāyāna doctor Nāgārjuna.

The great commentary takes the story as an example of the exercise of the Śila-pāramitā, and quotes it immediately after the Śivi-jātaka. The meeting of the king with the Brahmin, his pastime, his unhappy accident and his final triumph over the demon-king are vividly written. Besides these factors, which already exist in the last two texts, a new episode is now found ; this is the story of the captivity of ninety-nine kings.

The existence of the story as a separate Sūtra in the time of Nāgārjuna, may be proved from a description of fasc. 14, where the name of the Sutasoma-rājā-sūtra is mentioned in relation to the above-given example.³

It would not be quite superfluous to give here the whole translation of the story, because it is one of the most important texts, and it will serve for comparative purposes later on :

' Question : How can we complete the Silapāramitā ?
Answer : The commandments shall be strictly observed, by taking no care even for one's own life ; just as the king *Sutasoma*¹ did not violate the precept even when in danger of destruction through the great king Kalmāṣapāda.²

'Once upon a time there was a king named Sutasoma, who observed the commandments with energetic diligence, speaking the truth always. One morning, driving in his royal chariot, followed by court ladies, he was going to take his pastime in a garden. As he reached the city-gate he met a Brahmin who begged of him. [The Brahmin said :] "O king ! you are a happy and virtuous man, and I am very poor. Pity me and give me more or less !" The king answered : "Yes, willingly ! The Tathāgata teaches that alms must be always given, but wait till my return." Having thus given his promise, the king entered the garden and amused himself with the bath and other enjoyments. Just then a king with two wings, named Kalmāṣapāda,³ came flying through the air and captured the king from among the royal ladies, as a Garuḍa catches a Nāga from the ocean. All the king's female attendants cried out, and wept. Everyone in the garden was distracted. Without and within the city arose a great panic and lamentation. Kalmāṣapāda, carrying the king, flew away through the air and confined him among the ninety-nine kings. Seeing that Sutasoma wept continually, his tears dropping like rain, Kalmāṣapāda asked : "Why, O great Kṣatriya-king, do you weep like a child ? Where life is, there of necessity is death. There is a coming together, then follows a separation." Sutasoma answered : "I fear not death, but only my violation of truthfulness. Since my birth I have never spoken an untruth. This morning, as I reached the city-gate, a Brahmin came for alms. I promised to give him something after my return. But now from this deplorable accident I must commit a sin by having told a lie. Therefore I am weeping." Kalmāṣapāda said : "If you fear to tell a lie, I will allow you once to return, but you must come back here again after seven days, when you have finished giving to the Brahmin. It is not difficult for me to capture you if you were not to come back to me, since I have the power of flying." When Sutasoma reached his kingdom he gave alms very generously, inducted his heir-apparent to the throne, and assembled the whole population of the kingdom to beg them to excuse him, with the words : " My wisdom [as a king] was imperfect. My reign was not lawful. You are begged therefore to excuse me. Now my body belongs no more to me. I shall go back again [to Kalmāṣapāda to be a victim]." The people and the royal relatives besought him with their heads bent to the ground, saying : " O king, please reign over this kingdom with your benevolence. Have no anxiety on account of Kalmāṣapāda. We will build you an iron palace, guarded by a strong army. Though Kalmāṣapāda have miraculous power, he deserves not to be feared." The king said : " It cannot be so." He uttered then a stanza :

" To speak truth is the best of all moral precepts. To speak truth is a ladder attaining to heaven. To speak truth is very great, though it may seem a trifle. A liar will fall down to hell. Now I keep troth, and therefore can I feel no remorse, even if I give up my life."

" The king immediately went out in order to meet Kalmāṣapāda, who marvelled and rejoiced, when he saw Sutasoma from afar. He said : " You are a man who speaks truth and never breaks his word. All human beings take care for their life, but, when you were liberated from death, you came again to me for the sake of truthfulness. Verily you are a great man!" Then the king Sutasoma praised truthfulness : " For speaking truth, he is called a man. He is called not a man, when he speaks not truth." Thus he praised truthfulness and blamed the lie. Hearing that, Kalmāṣapāda felt the pure faith awake in him, and said to the king : " Verily you have spoken an excellent thing. I will now liberate you and give you the ninety-nine kings as a gift. They may return to their kingdoms, as they wish."

'When he had thus spoken, the hundred kings returned [to their kingdoms].'

2. THE SECOND FORM.

(A) The Sanskrit Versions.

6. Text 11. Sat-pāramitā-samuccaya.—As the title of the text indicates, it includes seventy-four sūtras, describing various former births of the Buddha, which are arranged under the six Pāramitās. The Kalmāṣapāda-legend, under the name Phumiṇ-rājā-sūtra, occurs in the last section of the Śila-pāramitā.

The hero and his adversary are described in the text as follows :

'In very remote time the Bodhisattva was a king named Phu-min (Japanese : Fu-myo).¹ He reigned over a great kingdom. His benevolence and sympathy radiated over ten regions of the earth. The people praised his virtues with hymns, because they were favoured by his compassion as children are loved by their father. In a neighbouring country a king lived. He ruled his subjects with rigorous laws. His strength was that of a lion, and he could catch a flying bird as he ran.'

This vigorous ruler is called A-gun,² a contracted transliteration for Aṅgulimāla, who is identified as this king in his former birth. Once this king tried to eat human flesh, and found it very delicious. He commanded his cook therefore thenceforth to offer him this horrible food. All his ministers remonstrated with him on this inhuman deed. As the king listened not to them, they banished him to a lonely mountain.

'The king entered now a deep forest and offered a prayer to a sacred tree : " If thou helpest me to be restored to my lost kingdom, I will bring thee a hundred kings as a sacrifice." Then follows in the text the captivity of the kings, the meeting of Phu-min to a Brahmin on the way to visit diseased and distressed persons, his confinement, his honourable return to the cannibal king, and his victory in converting the man-eater. The Brahmin who met Phu-min and received from him 12,000 gold pieces preaches the Buddhist doctrine of impermanence, composed in four stanzas.¹ These stanzas form the important part of the story, and they deserve to be here translated.

² The identification is found in T.E. VI., 5, 68b.

(1) At the end of the kalpa, heaven and earth will be entirely burnt up (a). The Mount Sumeru and the great oceans will be reduced to ashes and dust (b). Their happiness therein being ended, the gods and Nāgas will perish (c). Even the two standards² will fall down. How may there remain a land that is everlasting ?

(2) Birth, old age, sickness and death have no end, turning like a wheel (a). Wishes for the most part cannot be fulfilled ; sorrow and distress cause great injury (b). As desire is deep, calamity is high ; wounds and sores are due not to an external (cause), (but due to inner desire) (c). The three worlds are all painful. Is there no country on which we may depend ? (d)

(3) Existence is in its nature nothingness. It exists only through cause and condition (a). That which is once prosperous must (at last) fall into decay. That which is once full must (at last) be reduced to nothingness (b). Living beings resemble creeping worms living in an illusion (c). Sound and its echo are both void ; so also are kingdoms and lands (d).

(4) Consciousness and mind have no definite shape.³

² Heaven and earth.

They drive four snakes in temporary existence¹ (a). Ignorance cherishes (this temporary existence) as a precious thing and takes possession of it as a pleasant carriage² (b). The body has no constant master and the mind possesses no everlasting residence (c). The three worlds are all illusion. How, then, should there be such a country? (d).

The Damamūkāvadāna and Zan-wān-hu-kwo-sūtra borrow these stanzas in their Kalmāṣapāda legends. The translators of both texts used the Chinese rendering of our text, with few corrections. A short story of a prince, who was murdered for his debaucheries, is added to the main story in our text, and concludes with the identifications of Sutasona to Buddha himself and of Kalmāṣapāda to Āngulimāla. This supplementary story is modified and enlarged in the Damamūkāvadāna, and the same identifications are made.

7. Text 12. Samyuktāvadāna.—The name of the translator was lost when the Chēng-yuen-lu was composed, A.D. 800.³ The catalogue registers the Avadāna under the later Hān dynasty. This may be right, as the transliterations of the Sanskrit names and the technical terms show the characteristics of this period. But it must be later than the older Samyuktāvadāna, which is shorter than our text. The word ‘older’ in this title seems to be expressly given by the Buddhist scholars in ancient times to that Avadāna in order to distinguish it from our text and N., no. 1366.

The Avadānas consist of thirty-one sections, describing birth-stories and miracles of Buddha. No. 8 is our story, the contents of which are in the main identical with the former text :

² Schmidt: ‘Aus der Unwissenheit Erzeugten, wird alles dauernde Heil angenommen.’ Text 16 B. reads: Fettered by love of ignorance Ātman and that which belongs to Ātman are produced.

³ This work is wanting in the Nanjo’s Catalogue. The description of our text is found in fasc. 2, T.E. XXXVIII., 6, 8a.

'In ancient times there was a king. He was accustomed to eat human flesh, and gave orders to the cook to kill human beings in the night and to dress the flesh. His subjects knowing this banished the king, and, electing a wise man, crowned him as king. The cannibal king, after thirteen years, grew two wings in his body, and flying through the air devoured human beings in remote and near places. He offered up a prayer to a tree spirit in a mountain to bring him happiness, saying : "If thou so favour me that I return again to my kingdom and regain the throne I will offer thee five hundred kings in sacrifice."

Then follow in the story the captivity of the kings and other acts, as they are played in the Avadānas above mentioned. The name of Sutasoma or Phu-min, however, in our story is never found. The Brahmin utters here also stanzas, but they are not given in full form, only named. After the question of the man-eater the deliverer preaches five commandments, ten good works, four infinities, and six pāramitās.¹

The text gives the identifications of the hero and antagonist in the story as Buddha and Aṅgurimāla, as in the last Avadāna. It explains the etymology of Rājagṛha. The captured kings in the story after their liberation remained by the deliverer (Sutasoma), who built beautiful residences for them in his city. So the city received the name 'king's house.'

8. Text 14. Bodhisattrapūrvacaryā, Text 6, 19 A.B. Rāstrapāla-pariprcchā.—The Bodhisattvapūrvacaryā contains twenty-three Jātakas, among which 1-6 and 20-23 are written in detailed manner, while 7-19 are only found in abridged form. Our story is briefly summarized as No. 11 :

'When I was *Sutasoma*² I saved the lives of one hundred kings who were expelled to die, and converted Kalmāṣa-

¹ 5 Silas; 10 Kuśalamūlas; 4 Apramāṇas (see Mahāvyutpatti, sec. 69).

² Su-da-so-mi (Su-to-su-mi)

*pāda*¹ to the right view, by which the twelve years' curse on him was cancelled.'

A similar allusion is made in the Rāṣtrapāla-paripṛechā. The Sanskrit text corresponds exactly to both Chinese translations. The passage in the text is found under the enumeration of the great achievements of the Bodhisattva for the attainment of Buddhahood.

'When I lived as Sutasoma the renowned king, the deed I wrought was this: Through my faithfulness to duty, I delivered one hundred kings who had been carried off to their death.'

The former text seems to have abridged a certain extensive form of the story, because the duration of the curse-burdened condition of Kalmāṣapāda points to a complicated construction as the source of this allusion. The conversion of the man-eater is also dogmatically affirmed as against the primitive moral form of the legend in the first group.

The word 'right view,' Samyag-dṛṣti, means technically Buddhist doctrine or dogmas, not simply moral insight.

The later text may be supposed to have the same source as the former, the number of the captured kings being exactly similar.

9. Text 16, A.B. Zan-wān-hu-kwo-pān-zo-po-lo-mi-king.—Here a special development of the Kalmāṣapāda story may be seen. The Mahāyāna-followers now applied this story to the propagation of their Prajñāpāramitā doctrine. The text is evidently a new production, for other older Prajñāpāramitā Sūtras are referred to therein.² Both translations agree very closely. The epitome of the story is as follows:

'Kalmāṣapāda, the heir-apparent of Thien-lo,³ intended to sacrifice one thousand kings to his domestic god¹ on the occasion of his coronation, and had already captured 999 kings. As to the 1000th he caught a king named Phu-min, who asked Kalmāṣapāda to let him go free once to perform his last religious services. After his liberation Phu-min returned to his capital and gave alms to one hundred monks, who preached the Prajñāpāramitā. The head-priest instructed the king in four stanzas. Through him the king realized holy life. The king, after loyally returning, explained these four stanzas to his unhappy companions. They obtained thereby the holy state. Kalmāṣapāda was delivered also through the exhortation of Phu-min.

² Viz., Mahāprajñāpāramitā (Śatasāhasrikā), Vajracchedikā, Suvikrānta-vikrāmī and Pañcavimśatisāhasrikā. See fasc. 1, sect. I. In sect. II., Pañcavimśatisāhasrikā is cited.

The text had apparently borrowed its materials from Text 11. Not only the name of the hero, but the four verses, as I have said, coincide exactly. The first translator, Kumārajīva, copied, therefore, the whole Chinese rendering of the verses from that text, with a few insignificant corrections.²

10. Text 1. Mahāsutasoma-jātaka.—This text is one of the more voluminous Jātakas, extending to 54 pages in Fausböll's Edition, though it is shorter than the Mahāummagga or Vessantara, each of which covers over 100 pages. Abstract of the text :

I. Introduction (Fausböll, V. p. 457-458¹⁰; Francis, V. p. 246-247).—(a) There was once a king named Koravya, who ruled in the city Indapattha in Kuru. His son was Sutasoma. II. Man-eater.—(1) Cannibalism (F. 458¹⁰-461⁶; Fr. 247-249).—The Bodhisattva ruled righteously after his coronation, but the Kāsi prince, as king, never took his meal without meat. The cook by carelessness let the meat be stolen by a dog of the king. Going, therefore, to a cemetery he took a piece of flesh from the thigh of a corpse, roasted it, and gave it to the king, who found it tasteful, and ordered him to prepare the same dish in future. The cook did so, killing men in the night. The people complained and reported the loss of their kinsfolk to a leading officer, Kālahatthi, who caught the cook and learnt the whole truth.

(2) Remonstration (F. 461¹¹-470³⁰; Fr. 249-256).—Kālahatthi remonstrates with the king, telling a fish legend. The king answers him with a Sujāta story. Kālahatthi continues his speech by citing the example of a Brahmin. The king replies again with a fable. The officer refutes this with the story of a golden goose. But seeing that the king would not give up his wicked custom, Kālahatthi had him expelled from his kingdom.

(3) The ex-King in the Forest (F. 470³⁰-473¹⁶; Fr. 256-257).—The ex-king killed many human beings in the forest, and at last devoured even his cook, whom he had taken as his only follower. Afterwards he captured a Brahmin, whose escort pursued the ex-king and wounded him. He offered up, therefore, a prayer to the nymph of a banyan-tree: ‘If, within seven days, thou canst heal my wound, I will bathe thy trunk with blood drawn from 101 kings.’ He met with a Yakṣa, from whom he learned a spell, enabling him to run quickly.

(4) Captivity of Kings (F. 473¹⁶-476²; Fr. 258-259).—Now the man-eater captured the hundred kings one by one, and drilled holes in the palms of their hands and hung them up by a cord on the banyan-tree. He did not catch Sutasoma, because he had been his tutor in Takkasilā. The nymph of the tree did not desire the bloody sacrifice, and complained of it to the four great kings in heaven. They gave her the advice that Sutasoma was alone able to cure the man-eater. The nymph made the ex-king capture Sutasoma for his own cure.

III. Sutasoma.—(1) Captivity of Sutasoma (F. 476²-487¹⁹; Fr. 259-266).—Sutasoma went to bathe in the garden

Migāsira on the day of the Phussa conjunction. He met with a Brahmin called Nanda who had come from Takka-silā, bringing with him the knowledge of four stanzas taught by Kāśyapa Buddha, and each worth a hundred pieces of money. The king promised him to hear the stanzas after his bath. The man-eater caught the king in his bath. Being asked by the man-eater, Sutasoma explains the reason of his weeping, and was allowed by the cannibal after a long conversation to return only in order to hear the stanzas. The Brahmin uttered the stanzas for the king, and received 4,000 pieces of money. Notwithstanding the lamentations and entreaties of his parents and subjects, the king came back to the man-eater.

(2) Deliverance of the Man-Eater (F. 487³⁰-511; Fr. 266-277).—Moved by the fearlessness and truthfulness of the king, the man-eater, at the end of a long dialogue, begged to hear the four stanzas. The Bodhisattva uttered the stanzas, when the man-eater granted him four boons¹ which he had requested. When the Bodhisattva had cured the man-eater, he returned with the latter to Kāśī, reconciled the queen and Kālahatthi, and restored him again to the throne. The place where the man-eater was cured received the name of Kammāsadamma.

The name of the hero is Sutasoma as in the Sanskrit version, but the adversary, the man-eater, is not named in the main part of the story. Nevertheless we read his name clearly in verses 472, 473,² and in the conclusion³ as ¹ 1. Long life to the man-eater; 2. The release of the captured kings; 3. Their restoration to their respective kingdoms; 4. Abstinence from human flesh.

² F. V., p. 503; Fr. V., p. 274: ‘Kammāsapādena vihetitattā talāvutā assumukhā rudantā.’ (With bodies injured by Kammāsapāda, strung up [upon the tree] through [perforated] palms of hands, with faces full of tears, crying.) Francis's translation is here rather free, omitting the important name of the king. The verse 473 is the same, except that it is spoken by the kings themselves.

³ F. V. 511; Fr. V. 279: ‘Kammāsapādassa damitaṭṭhāne niviṭṭhattā pana so Kammāsadamma-nigamo nāma jāto.’ (On the spot, where Kammāsapāda was converted, the place grew into the town of Kammāsadamma, viz., taming of Kammāsa[pāda].)

Kammāsapāda. This is a rather curious fact. But it is probable that this important name, at the time when the present form of the Mahāsutasoma-jātaka was compiled, which may belong to a comparatively recent date, was no longer familiar to the Pāli Jātaka writers, and, therefore, was totally omitted in the main part of the story, leaving only slight traces in the more insignificant parts quite neglected and unnoticed.

Though the Jātaka is considerably enlarged and elaborate as compared with the Sanskrit versions, and in artificial and dramatic skill far exceeds them, the main points of the story agree with the Śatpāramitāsamuccaya. Among these similarities two points are especially important: Firstly, the nymph of the banyan-tree, as the object of the man-eater's worship, is found here in the same way as in the Chinese version. Secondly, the four stanzas,¹ which form the most important point of the story, are similar. The contents of the stanzas in the Pāli and Chinese are not quite identical. The central idea of both is not different.

Pāli.	Chinese.

4. The great difference between the dharma and wordliness.	— } of the world and living beings.

Verses 1-2 in the Pāli serve as an introduction, and the last is a fuller explanation of the third, which recurs in the Dhammapada,² and is the main subject of the stanzas. This verse 3, teaching the impermanence of worldly power and splendour, strikes the same chord as the Sanskrit version, except that the latter arranges the verses more dogmatically and systematically than the Jātaka, and explains only the negative side.

In the Chinese text the Brahmin receives 12,000 pieces of gold for reciting the four stanzas, while in the Pāli the fee is 4,000.

The four boons, which the man-eater gave to Sutasoma to hear the stanzas, are not known in the Chinese versions.

In general, "the elaborate and prolix style of the Pālijātaka is sufficient to prove the recent date of its present form ; hence little comment is called for. One of the most modern elaborations" of the Jātakas is probably the episode of the dialogue between the king and Kālahatthi. The long remonstrance of the commander-in-chief and the opposition of the king, with the many examples and legends, show us clearly the lateness of this part. The Jātakamālā, which we shall soon examine, is indebted to the Jātaka for its poetical material, and takes over many verses from our text. But Śūra, the author of the poem, is quite ignorant of this episode. The introduction belongs also to a modern date, as the description itself suggests. The identification of the dramatis personæ (samodhāna) in the Jātaka is more particularized and artificial than the Sanskrit version. Besides the two main rôles, the other persons identified are : Ānanda as the Brahmin Nanda, Sāriputta as Kālahatthi, Kassapa as the nymph of the tree, and Anuruddha as the god Sakka.

11. Texts 2 and 3, Cariyā-piṭaka and Nidāna-kathā.—The story in the Cariyā-piṭaka is an abridged form of the Mahā-sutasoma-jātaka. The whole text verbatim is as follows :

(1) Once, when I was Sutasoma, lord of the earth, I was captured by a man-eater, and remembered a Brahmin with distress of heart.

(2) Having strung up the hundred warriors through [their perforated] palms, and reduced them to despair, that he might offer his sacrifice, he led me among them.

(3) The man-eater asked me : 'Do you wish to be released ? If you again come back to me, I will let it be as you wish.'

(4) On this question I promised faithfully to return.

When I returned to the city I delivered up my pleasant kingdom.

(5) After I had remembered the hundred dharmas, which were practised by former Buddhas, and had given alms to the Brahmin, I came back again to the man-eater.

(6) Now I did not hesitate whether I should be killed or not. I came back again to give up my life in order to keep my troth. There is nothing like speaking the truth. Such is my perfection in speaking the truth.

The laconic allusion to the cruel treatment of the captured kings by the man-eater in verse 2 cannot be understood without the full text of the Mahāsutasa-ma-jātaka.

Text 3, the Nidāna-kathā, condenses the story still more. This introduction to the Jātaka is, of course, a more recent compilation than the Jātaka itself. The story is given in like manner in the Cariyā-pitaka, as an example of the perfection of the veracity and faithfulness of the Bodhisattva. I will borrow here the translation by Professor Rhys Davids:¹

'And so in the Mahāsutasa-ma Birth according to the word : Guarding the word of Truth, and offering up my life, I delivered the hundred warriors: Such is my perfection of Truth.'

Here is a curious parallelism of the adaptation of the story to serve as an example of the Pāramitā. In the Chinese texts the story serves always as the example of the Śila-pāramitā,² while both Pāli texts use it as the example of the perfection of truthfulness among the ten Pāramitās.³

12. Texts 4 and 5, Jayaddisa-jātaka and Cariyā-pitaka, II., 9.—The Jayaddisa-jātaka apparently is a modified form of the Mahāsutasa-ma-jātaka. The trace of this recast may be sufficiently followed in the text. The Jātaka divides the personality of Sutasoma into two individuals. The first half of his worldly career as the king makes up the part of Jayaddisa. From the second half of his religious achievement as the deliverer, is derived the character of Alitasattu. The episode in the Mahāsutasoma, the wounding of the man-eater, by the followers of the travelling Brahmin, is found here in an imperfect sketch. The text overlooks the important motive of this interlude in the original Jātaka, making it rather an insignificant and unnecessary act. The Brahmin Nanda, who brought the four stanzas, also appears here, but the verses are not given in detail. The conclusion of the Jātaka evidently presupposes the existence of the Sutasoma-jātaka, describing the village, where the ogre was tamed by Alitasattu :

‘ This village grew into the town Culla-kammāsadamma. The region, where the man-eater was tamed by the great being Sutasoma, was to be known as the town Mahā-kammāsadamma.’¹

The tentative adaptation of the name Kammāsa for the man-eater, in total ignorance of the original meaning, is most interesting. For the Jātaka itself see the following epitome.

I. Introduction (F.V., p. 21-22⁷; Fr.V., 11-12).

A king lived in a city of the northern Pañcāla, in the kingdom of Kampilla. Cursed by a rival in her former existence, the queen had her new-born children twice devoured by an ogress. At the third birth the attendants of the queen prevented the ogress from devouring the son. But the ogress got him, and went to a cemetery, when she reared him on human flesh. He became, therefore, an ogre. The queen gave birth to yet another son, who is called Jayaddisa. When he succeeded his father as king, the Bodhisattva was born as his son, with the name of Alitasattu.

II. Man-eater (F. 22⁷-22²⁵; Fr. 12-13).

The ogre used to feed on human flesh, without hiding his shape. People petitioned the king to catch him. Escaping from the pursuit of the people, he roamed about in a forest and captured men one by one, devouring them. He seized a Brahmin, but, being wounded by a splinter of wood as he was running, dropped his prey.

III. Jayaddisa (F.V., 22²⁵-25¹⁶; Fr. 13-14).

King Jayaddisa proclaimed a hunt. Just as he was starting, a native Brahmin of Takṣasilā named Nanda came into the king's presence bringing four stanzas, each worth one hundred pieces of money. The king met with the man-eater, and was made captive. He begged the ogre to liberate him only till he had heard the stanzas. The ogre allowed it. The king promised to come back again after seven days.

IV. Alitasattu (F.V. 25¹⁸-36; Fr. 14-19).

Alitasattu persuaded his father to send him to the man-eater, as a substitute. The great lamentation of the royal family and subjects then follows.¹ As the prince came to the man-eater, the latter, moved by his heroism and fearlessness, could not devour him.² Alitasattu, observing that the ogre was his only uncle, cured him, and brought him back to Jayaddisa, who wished to deliver the kingdom to him. As he declined it, the king built a settlement in a mountain for him.

An abridgment of this Jātaka is found in the ninth section of the second Book, Sīla-pāramitā in the Cariyāpitaka. It consists of eleven stanzas.³ As the contents are

B. THE SECOND GROUP.

1. THE FIRST FORM.

13. Text 20. The Simhasaudāsa-māṃsabhaṅgāsanivṛtti.—The text is a beautiful poem consisting of 38½ stanzas, accompanied by a short piece of prose. The name of the man-eater is called here Simhasaudāsa. Saudāsa is the well-known patronymic of Kalmāṣapāda in the Epics and Purāṇas. The father of the ex-king is not Brahmadatta of Benares, as in the other Buddhist texts, but is the same as in the Brahmanic literature—viz., Sudāsa of Magadha. The name of Kalmāṣapāda does not occur in the text, but the spotted feet of Saudāsa are described. The name of the hero is Śrutasoma.¹ The first ligature of this name, Śru, is easily changeable with akṣara Su in the Sanskrit writing.²

The text teaches, as the title indicates, the prohibition against eating flesh as its main subject. The impermanence and emptiness of the world are also preached as subordinate matters. The short supplementary prose piece describes the Śivi-jātaka in a contracted form.

I. Prelude.

The king Sudāsa went to a mountain to hunt. Having been left by his followers, he roamed about the forest and met with a lioness, who forced the king to wed her (v. 1-3). The lioness was delivered of a son with a lion's head and human body, 'a powerful man of spotted feet like a king of animals.' When he learned from the mother-lioness that he was the son of Sudāsa, he visited the king, and afterwards succeeded him (v. 4-9).

² This change of the ligature is seen also in the Brahmanic MSS. See the St. Petersburg Skt. Dictionary, vol. vii., p. 1053.

II. Main Part.

(1) Cannibalism of Saudāsa.—Inheriting the lion's nature, Saudāsa ate only flesh. Once a dog stole the meat reserved for him. From fear of punishment the cook took a small child, roasted it, and sent the dish to the king. As this pleased the king's taste, he ordered the same dish in future (v. 10-15). The subjects of the king, learning of this horrible crime, attempted to kill Saudāsa. He offered up a prayer to a goblin to give him wings, and vowed that if the wish were fulfilled, he would sacrifice to him one hundred kings (v. 16, 17).

(2) Captivity of Kings.—As a feathered demon, Saudāsa caught ninety-nine kings, and at last captured Śrutasoma while in his bath. Śrutasoma begged the demon to set him free on condition that he would come back again after seven days. The demon suffered him to go (v. 18-25).

(3) Emancipation of Saudāsa.—Śrutasoma, after seven days, during which he heard the Dharma, came again to Saudāsa and preached to him on the heavy crime of flesh-eating. He expounded also the impermanence and emptiness of the world and of living beings. Converted, Saudāsa liberated the kings in prison (v. 26-36), returned to Magadha, reigned righteously, and forbade his subjects to eat flesh. Śrutasoma uttered a vow that these kings, as well as Saudāsa, would realize Buddhahood in the future (v. 36-38½).

14. Text 17A. Laṅkāvatāra.—The text preserves an older form than the two other translations and the existing Sanskrit text, as we shall see presently. Like many of the Mahāyāna-sūtras, the text emphatically forbids the eating of any flesh.¹ Many examples on the sinfulness of flesh-eating, which would convert the human being into a cannibal, are given. Among these examples the Kalmāṣapāda legend is also referred to:

Hastikakṣe, Mahāmeghe, Nirvāṇāngulimālike,

'In remote times there was a king with the name of Siṃhasaudāsa. He was accustomed to flesh-food, and at last ate human flesh. As the subjects of the king could not endure [this horrible usage] they excited a revolt, and refused to pay taxes. Flesh-eating brings these great misfortunes. The Buddhist must, therefore, absolutely not eat flesh.'

The text implies a fuller story as told in the last text, for the name Siṃhasaudāsa evidently refers to it.

15. Text 7. Jātakamālā.—It is very regrettable that there is no Chinese translation of this highly poetical work, the fame of which was already noticed by the famous I-thing.¹ A work, bearing the same title and author is found in Nanjio's Catalogue, No. 1312. But it is quite different, and it seems that the work wrongly connected two different texts under the well-known title.²

Our text combines the Pāli Sutasoma-jātaka and the Sanskrit traditions. On the side of the hero, Sutasoma, Jātakamālā.

Here we have sufficient ground to assume that the author of the Jātakamālā was not acquainted with at least the present form of the Sutasoma-jātaka, but he had used a more primitive version of the story. The Brahmin bringing four stanzas to the hero is not named in the Jātakamālā, while he is called Nanda in the Pāli. Kālahatthi, who plays a by no means unimportant rôle in the Pāli text, and whose dialogue with the man-eater is suitable material for a poetical work, is not found here. The complicated episode of the nymph of the banyan-tree is also foreign to Śūra. The Jātakamālā owes much to the Pāli in the second half of the story, which is concerned with the conversion of the man-eater. In the entire metrical portion of the text, which numbers nearly one hundred stanzas, verses 1-46 cannot be found in the Pāli stanzas, but in the remaining part twenty-one verses have been carefully identified by Professor Speyer.¹ The father of the man-eater, bearing the Epic name of Sudāsa, his unnatural relation with the lioness, the birth of Saudāsa, the prayer of the man-eater to goblins,² to escape from peril, and the captivity of the hundred kings, all agrees exactly with the Simhasaudāsa-sūtra given above.

16. Text 9. Bhadrakalpāradāna.—In the Chinese Tripitaka this work is wanting. The story is found under No. 34³ in the Avadāna. As I had not an opportunity of reading the manuscript of this text, I have used an extract made by Professor d'Oldenbourg.⁴ Dr. Rājendralāla Mitra gives also a short notice of the story in his 'Nepalese Buddhist Literature':⁵

'Rāja Sulāsa of Benares had by a lioness a son named Saudāsa.⁶ When that son came to the throne he was in the habit of eating privately raw human flesh in the prison-house. He was for this expelled by the nobles from the throne. He fell in with his lioness mother, who advised him to celebrate a sacrifice of a hundred royal youths. After ninety-nine princes had been already secured, the ex-king went in search of Sutasoma, whose achievements form the subject of another part—viz., Sutasoma-jātaka. The Lord said I was that Sutasoma.'

Professor d'Oldenbourg maintains that this Jātaka 'mostly copies word for word' from the Jātakamālā. But, as Professor Speyer had already pointed out,¹ there are some minute discrepancies with the latter. The meeting of Saudāsa with his lioness mother in his banishment is never found in the other Avadānas or Jātakas.

17. Texts 18, 21. Damamūkāvadāna.—The Tibetan text of the work was translated from the Chinese, which originated from Khotan, and was compiled in Turfan in its present form.² No wonder, therefore, that we see an exact coincidence in these two texts, that word after word can be almost identified in the two translations. A conscientious comparison of these two versions has been published by Professor Takakusu.³

The following epitome of this text would manifest to us how the story reached a highly elaborate and developed construction :

I. Prelude (Chinese, T.E. XIV., 9, 64a, 1-6 ; Schmidt, 311¹⁴-312⁹).

Brahmadatta, the King of Benares, went to hunt, and being left by his followers, he entered a forest, where he saw a lioness. She forced the king to cohabit with her. After some time she was delivered of a son, whose body was like a man but whose feet were spotted. Mindful of the father, the lioness brought the baby to the king, who had him nourished and educated, giving him the name Kalmāṣapāda.

II. Kalmāṣapāda.

(1) Indirect Cause of the Fall (Ch., 64a, 6-11 ; Sch., 312⁹-313³).—Kalmāṣapāda succeeded to the throne and had two queens, one a Brahmīne and the other a Kṣatriyan lady. One day he said to them both that she who first followed him into the garden should share with him in the amusements of the day, the other not. The Brahmin lady worshipped a temple on the way, and so failed to pass the day with the king. She begged the king at another time to grant her wish, and demolished the temple. The god of the temple intended to be avenged upon the king, but it was very difficult to get a chance.

(2) Direct Cause of the Fall (Ch., 64a, 11-17; Sch., 312⁹-314⁷).—In a mountain lived a sage, receiving every day the king's invitation to a meal. One day, as he came not to the king, the temple-god transformed himself into the saint, and requested the king thenceforth to offer him always meat. In another day when the true sage came, the king gave him meat. Being offended with this unworthy food, he laid a curse upon the king to become a cannibal for twelve years.

(3) Cannibalism (Ch., 64a¹⁷-64b¹²; Sch., 314⁷-315²⁵).—The cook of the king neglected to prepare flesh, and from fear of punishment, finding the corpse of a child, roasted it and gave it to the king. Surprised at the tastiness of the food, the king ordered the cook to offer him always the same. The officers, from the complaint of townsmen at the loss of their kinsfolk, caught the cook in the night, when he had captured a child and killed it. The king had now to confess his wicked custom to the officers, who intended to put the king to death in his bath. The king begged their forgiveness. As they heard him not, the king became a flying man-eater in consequence of his fearful oath, and thenceforth he destroyed many human beings.

(4) Imprisonment of a Thousand Kings (Ch., 64b, 12-15; Sch., 316²⁶-317¹⁶).—Many rāksasas followed Kalmāṣapāda, and requested him to make a banquet in which a thousand kings should be devoured. He captured as many as 999 kings, and imprisoned them.

III. Sutasoma.

(1) Captivity (Ch., 64b16-65a7; Sch., 317¹⁶-319¹⁴).—As the thousandth, Kalmāṣapāda captured Sutasoma while he bathed. The latter begged the man-eater to release him for seven days, so that he could give alms to a Brahmin. The man-eater agreed. Sutasoma heard the four verses from the Brahmin.

(2) Triumph (Ch., 65a, 7-16; Sch., 319¹⁶-320).—For all the lamentations and entreaties of the royal family and his subjects, Sutasoma came faithfully back to the man-eater. He recited four stanzas for Kalmāṣapāda, and preached the fearful result of the killing in contrast with the blessed rewards of mercy. Kalmāṣapāda was converted, released the imprisoned kings, and returned to his kingdom again as a peaceful ruler.

The noticeable and important point in the story is the curse uttered by the sage. This is doubtless an influence of the Mahābhārata, and it will be fully treated of in the next chapter. This is quite a new factor in the story, never known to the Pāli Jātaka or to the northern Avadānas. The stanzas recited by the Brahmin are identical with those in Texts 11 and 16a. The translator of our Avadāna copied the whole text from the later with only a few alterations.¹

Sutasoma and Kalmāṣapāda immediately after the story are identified as having been the Buddha and Aṅgulimāla in a former existence.²

18. Texts 9, 17 B.C. Lanikāratāra, its Second and Third Translations.—The second translation by Bodhiruci is of an enlarged form, thrice the size of the first, with many interpolations, one of which may be seen in the case of the Kalmāṣapāda legend. Beside the example of Simhasaudāsa, the text repeats the story under the name of Kalmāṣapāda, after an allusion to the Śivi-jātaka.

The third translation by Śikṣānanda is of almost the same size, but the division of the chapters is somewhat different. It corresponds generally to the existing Sanskrit text.³

O Mahāmati, I remember, in ancient time there was a king named Sīphādāsa, who was accustomed to eat flesh. Addicted to the taste of meat, he at last ate human flesh. His father, mother, brothers, wives, and sons abandoned him. All peoples in towns and lands excited a revolt against him and destroyed his life. [Then follows the Śivi-jātaka.]

O Mahāmati, there is a king who never took flesh-meal, went out for amusement, driving his horse. Alarmed at something, the horse dashed into a deep ravine. The king lost his followers and found no way to return. Lions, tigers, and wolves did him no harm, for he never ate flesh. He enjoyed sensual pleasure with a lioness who gave birth to Kalmāṣapāda and others. The sons by heredity naturally ate flesh, though they became kings. It pleased them to eat flesh in a town with seven families. Excessive meat-eating brought them at last to eat human flesh. Boys and girls born to them were all Rākṣasas. There he amused himself with a lioness, committing an odious deed. The lioness gave birth to sons, the elder of whom was called Kalmāṣapāda. He became afterwards a king, reigning over seven kotis of families. By heredity he ate nothing but flesh; commencing with flesh of bipeds and quadrupeds, he at last ate human flesh. Boys and girls born to him were all Rākṣasas. After the existence of that life, they had to be reborn as lions, wild dogs, wolves, tigers, leopards, eagles, or hawks. It is impos-

The interesting interpolation already noticed manifests itself herein, that when and where it took place nothing was known as to the identity of Simhasaudāsa and Kalmāṣapāda; and, moreover, that the interpolator, besides the first example, in spite of the name of Simhasaudāsa implying the lioness legend, made the entirely superfluous addition of the Kalmāṣapāda story, which was at that time one of the most popular Avadānas among the northern Buddhists—perhaps through the existence of a similar story in the Damamukāvadāna. The interpolator modified the story in adopting it, for here the lioness not only brought forth Kalmāṣapāda but also his brothers. The King Sudāsa, who had an unnatural intercourse with that queen of beasts, according to the Sanskrit text, had many participants in his odious deed.

Thus it is not rash to suppose that the allusion in the later forms of Laṅkāvatāra shows the latest development of the Kalmāṣapāda story.

II. KALMĀṢAPĀDA STORIES IN THE BRAHMANIC LITERATURE.

19. Arrangement of the Stories.—In the last chapter the versions of the story are arranged according to the various stadia of their development, from the simplest to the most elaborate form. In the present chapter it would be convenient to take the contrary way, commencing with the latest form in the Purāṇas and Mahābhārata, then tracing backwards its origin in the Vedic literature.

Though their forms are manifold, the main character of the story in the Avadāna and Jātaka remains always unchanged. Various elements and factors are only added around one and the same central point. The case in the Brahmanic literature is utterly different. The story in the Mahābhārata, which the Purāṇas inherited and modified, borrowed the materials from old traditions kept in the Rg-veda and its commentaries, and transformed them as a new recast. Thus the story newly constructed differs from its originals in character. On this account, the traces of our story in old writings are faint and fragmentary, and to seek the connection from that end would be a difficult task, if one had no knowledge of the whole story lately developed.

20. Purāṇic Literature.—In three Purāṇas the Kalmāṣapāda story is told in its full form—that is to say, in the Viṣṇu, the Bhāgavata, and the Skanda. In other Purāṇas the name of the king appears in the genealogical lists, giving only a short allusion to the story.

As Professor Macdonell indicates,¹ the Bhāgavata presupposes the existence of the Viṣṇu. Naturally, therefore, we find a perfect coincidence of the story in the two Purāṇas.² The contents of the story are summarized as follows :

1. Cause of the Cannibalism—the Curse.

(a) Indirect Cause (the King and two Rākṣasas).—Saudāsa, the king, went into the forest to hunt, and saw a couple of tigers, which are transformations of two rākṣasas. The king killed one of them; the other vowed vengeance (Viṣṇu, IV., 4, 22-23; Bhāgavata, IX., 9, 20).

(b) Direct Cause (the King and Vasiṣṭha).—The king celebrated a sacrifice conducted by his teacher, Vasiṣṭha. When the sacrifice was ending the rākṣasa assumed the shape of Vasiṣṭha, and commanded the king to give him meat for his food. Then the demon transformed himself into a cook and dressed human flesh, which the king gave to the sage (V., 24-26 ; Bh., 21). The sage, provoked by the insult, cursed the king into becoming a cannibal for twelve years (V., 26-27 ; Bh., 22-23).

2. Effect of the Curse—the Cannibalism.

(a) The king intended to curse the sage with the holy water in the sacrifice ; but reminded by queen Madayantī, he set it down at his feet, as this cursed water causes unhappy effect if it be thrown on to the earth or into the air. From the power of the imprecation his feet became spotted, hence he received the name Kalmāṣapāda (V., 28-32 ; Bh., 23-25).

(b) In consequence of the imprecation the king became a cannibal, and in the sixth watch of the night wandered through the forest and destroyed many human lives. Once he saw a Brahmin sleeping with his wife. In spite of the entreaties of the wife, he devoured the husband. The wife cursed the king to die immediately, should he sleep with his queen (V., 32-36 ; Bh., 25-35).

3. After play—Birth of Aśmaka.

At the expiation of the term of his curse Saudāsa went home, but, reminded of the imprecation of the Brahmin's wife, remained childless. However, having solicited the interposition of Vasiṣṭha, the queen became pregnant. The pregnancy endured seven years, and the queen opened the womb with a piece of stone, and was delivered of a son, who is therefore called Aśmaka (V., 37-38 ; Bh., 36-39).

In the Skanda-Purāṇa the story is thrice mentioned. The story in the Brahma-khaṇḍa¹ is absolutely identical with the contents given above. The Avanta-khaṇḍa¹ in the Purāṇa alludes also to the same story. But a story occurring in the Anbhika-khaṇḍa² is a direct copy of that in the Mahābhārata.

To register Kalmāṣapāda in the genealogy of the solar race, the Vāyu, Liṅga, Garuḍa, and Kūrma, on the one hand, agree exactly; composed in the same verses, with a summary on the birth of Aśmaka in a country called Kalmāṣapādaka.³

The stanzas are apparently borrowed from the Hari-vāṇī. Here Sudāsa is the father of Kalmāṣapāda, and Aśmaka is his son. The Matsya, Padma, and Brahma, on the other hand, have the same genealogical order, describing R̥tuparna as the father of the king, and Sarvakarman as his son.⁴ The Agni-Purāṇa is similar with the Matsya and others in giving the patronymic lineage of Kalmāṣapāda, but it has its own independent stanzas.⁵ In this Purāṇa the name Kalmāṣāṅghri metri causa occurs, with the same meaning as Kalmāṣapāda. In the Mārkaṇḍeya-Purāṇa the king is not mentioned, but allusion is made to a story narrating the destruction of Vasiṣṭha's hundred sons by Viśvāmitra.¹ This story, as we shall see, is closely connected with our story, being a part of its original form.

21. Epic Literature.—Kalmāṣapāda appears in various places in the Mahābhārata. The main story of the king, however, is found in the Ādi-parvan 178.² The summary of the story is as follows :

1. Cause of the Cannibalism—the Curses.

(a) First Curse (Śakti and the King).—Kalmāṣapāda went to hunt and met Śakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha, on a narrow road. As the Brahmin did not give way to the King, he whipped the ascetic, who cursed the king to become a cannibal (178, 1-14).

(b) Auxiliary Cause (Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra).—Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were struggling to get the position of preceptor to the king. As the king begged the protection of Śakti, Viśvāmitra ordered a rākṣasa to possess the king, who lost his reason thereby (15-23).

(c) Second Curse (the King and a Brahmin).—A Brahmin met with the king in the forest and begged of him some meat. Having forgotten it, the king ordered the cook at midnight to dress meat for the Brahmin; but the cook informed the king that he failed to get any. The king ordered him to roast human flesh, which he had obtained from the executioner. When the dressed flesh was given, the Brahmin cursed the king to roam about as a cannibal (24-36).

2. Effect of the Curses.

(a) Direct Effect (Destruction of the Hundred Sons of Vasiṣṭha).—The curse on the king thus repeated brought about a terrible result. The king devoured first Śakti, then, urged by Viśvāmitra, he killed all the sons of Vasiṣṭha, ninety-nine of younger brothers of Śakti (37-42).

(b) Indirect Effect (Lamentation of Vasiṣṭha).—Overcome with grief, Vasiṣṭha determined to destroy himself, but all means were unsuccessful. At last he went to the rivers Vipāś and Śatadrū to drown himself, but he found that also impossible (43-179, 9).

3. Deliverance.

(a) Vasiṣṭha.—The sage met with Adṛsyantī, the wife of Śakti, and having learned of her pregnancy, he rejoiced and gave up his intention of suicide (10-16).

(b) The King.—With his daughter-in-law, the sage visited the king in the forest, and freed him from the curse. The king returned to his old residence in Ayodhyā with the sage (17-47).

4. After-Play.

The queen of Kalmāṣapāda, Madayantī, conceived by Vasiṣṭha, a connection solicited by the king. The queen tore open her womb with a piece of stone and was delivered of a son, after twelve years' pregnancy. The son is, therefore, called Aśmaka, who founded a city, Paudanya.

After a few chapters in the same Parvan, there is an apologetical explanation for the immorality committed by Vasiṣṭha.¹ ‘Why did that great and illustrious sage Vasiṣṭha—knowing as he knew all the great precepts of religion—go to her to whom he should not go? Was this an act of sin on the part of Vasiṣṭha?’² The explanation is absolutely the same with that in the two Purāṇas above summarized. An allusion to this apology is given in chapter cxxii., where morality for women is taught :

‘We have heard that Madayantī, being appointed by (her husband) Saudāsa, went to Ṛṣi Vasiṣṭha to raise up offspring. That lady obtained from him a son, named Aśmaka. She did this, moved by the desire of doing good to her husband.’³

This defence of Vasiṣṭha, which, on the other side, also indicates the ennoblement of the military race through the blood of a Brahmin, must be, of course, a later production, as the legend itself clearly shows.

An episode occurring during the cannibal period of the king is composed in the Aśvamedha-parvan.¹ Manifestly it presupposes the existence of the main story above mentioned.

The scene is the forest, where the ex-king Kalmāṣapāda is roaming, terrible to see. A certain Brahmin, Uttanika, ordered by his teacher, comes to beg of the cannibal king jewelled earrings, worn by his queen, Madayantī. The king intended to devour him, but the Brahmin promised him to come again as victim after the fulfilment of his duty, as a Brahmin always keeps his word. In the hope of his deliverance from the curse through the merit of giving such precious thing, the king agreed to the request of the Brahmin, and also refrained from killing him afterwards. This episode has a striking analogy with the Sutasoma-jātakas, the main object of which teaches truthfulness. It would not be unnatural to suppose that here the Epic had received an unconscious influence from Buddhist writings.

A short passage in the Karṇa - parvan² relating to Kalmāṣapāda indicates a quite different origin :

‘ You shall know all this, O Śalya ; I will speak again to you. A rāksasa by the name of Kalmāṣapāda, while bathing in a tank, said : Begging is Kṣatriya’s dirt, . . . the Madra-women are the dirt of the whole female sex. While going down the stream a king rescued the Rāksasa.’

Now who this king is is entirely obscure in the text. But it is not impossible to expect here also a faint influence from Buddhist scriptures. Then the said king may be Sutasoma, who has delivered Kalmāṣapāda.

Like the Purāṇas, the Harivamśa and the Rāmāyaṇa bring the name of the king into the genealogical tree of the Ikṣvāku race. In the Harivamśa, which has a close connection with various Purāṇas, the stanzas registering

Kalmāṣapāda¹ are identical with those found in the Vāyu and elsewhere.

In the Rāmāyaṇa the genealogical description of the hero is twice repeated.² The surname of Puruṣādaka, the man-eater, is given here also. This shows that the cannibal story is known to the author of the Rāmāyaṇa.

22. Epic and Purāṇas.—Before trying to examine the origin of the Epic story, it would be necessary to give a glance at the relation between the Epic and Purāṇic stories, and at the same time to look briefly at their historical meaning.

In general, the Mahābhārata represents a culminating period of the priestly supremacy. Its tendency is to convince the submission of the worldly power to the Brahmanic sovereignty. Every legend in the Epic more or less shows this tendency, the story of the king Nahuṣa being a good example.

The Kalmāṣapāda story especially manifests this with vivid colouring, as Professor Holtzmann has pointed out.³ The central point of the story is distinctly seen in the following conversation between the king and Vasiṣṭha,⁴ when the curse was lifted from the king :

¹ Bombay edition, 1861, I., 15, 21-22, f. 19 B.; Langlois' French translation, I., p. 72; Dutt's translation (Calcutta, 1897), p. 60. Here the edition reads : 'Aśmakam̄ janayāmāsa Ikṣvāku-kulavṛddhaye.' The last word is of course wrong. Dutt wrongly translates the proper name Mitrasaha to 'who was greatly attached to his friends.'

² I., 70, 38-39 ; II., 110, 29 ; Bombay edition, 1859, I., f. 110 B., f. 209 B; Gorressio's edition, I., p. 275 ; II., p. 443 ; Schlegel's edition, I., p. 253 ; II., p. 341 ; Griffith's translation (popular ed., 1895), pp. 82, 220. His translation is rather free :

From him came Purushādak bold,
Fierce hero of gigantic mould :
Kalmāṣapāda's name he bore,
Because his feet were spotted o'er.

The last line is very important. But it is not found in the text of the editions above given. The translator seems to have supplied the line with some commentary, in which this Purāṇic legend is quoted.

³ Holtzmann's Mahābhārata, IV., p. 38.

⁴ Ādi, 179, 31-32; Dutt, I., p. 249.

Vasiṣṭha said : 'O king of men, my desire has been fulfilled at the proper time. Return to your kingdom and rule your subjects. Never (again) disregard the Brahmanas.'

The king said : 'O illustrious sir, I shall never again disregard the excellent Brahmanas. In obedience to your command, I shall properly worship the Brahmanas.'

How great this privilege was abused by the Brahmins we can clearly discern from the background of the story. The adultery of Vasiṣṭha, in spite of the latter's sophistical apology, affords one proof. The Epic holds that this flagrant act will serve to ennable the Kṣatryian caste through the blood of the Brahmins. Another instance is that of king Bali giving his wife Sudeṣṇā to a Brahmin, Dīrghatamas, who bore him five sons.¹ The guilty action of Vasiṣṭha is whitewashed, moreover, in a passage of the Epic as one form of giving alms to Brahmins :²

'King Mitrasaha ascended to heaven by giving his favourite wife Madayantī to Vasiṣṭha.'

The warriors had in that period to put up with this oppression of the Brahmins, and remained in a painful submission, but not without a certain temporary resistance. We read of this in the plaintive voice of the unhappy King Saudāsa, who played the part of Emperor Henry IV. against the power of the Indian papacy, and was immediately punished more severely than by the latter's three days' penance :

'Kṣatriyas are seen to honour the Brahmins from the very beginning of the creation. Against the Brahmanas, however, many offences originate (on the part of the Kṣatriyas).'³

Here the conflict between the king and Śakti is suggested,

² Anuśāsana, 137, 18 ; Dutt, XIII., p. 280. Mitrasaha is another name of Kalamāṣapāda.

³ Aśvamedha, 58, 5 ; Dutt, XIV., p. 69.

and in conclusion a maxim of absolute submission is given :

'It is impossible for a king that is hostile to Brahmanas to continue living in this world, or to acquire happiness in the next.'¹

Thus the legend in the Mahābhārata reflects a political Culturbild.

The Purāṇas had doubtlessly drawn from the Mahābhārata for the material to form a new story of Kalmāṣapāda, as they usually do. It is unnecessary to treat of the process of modification in the Purāṇas, but concerning the general tendency of the story a few words are needful. The character of the Purāṇic story differs greatly from the Epic. It represents another period of Indian culture. The picture turns now to a period of alliance or compromise. This tendency appears already in the Harivamśa and Rāmāyaṇa. The Brahmans who had consolidated their power, and whose superiority were universally acknowledged, had now to seek for a political support from the worldly power, as it was a pressing necessity for them to hold their position against powerful heretics — namely, against the Buddhists and the Jains.

The genealogical trees in the Purāṇas were therefore manufactured to gratify the royal house. The original motive of the submission and oppression in the Mahābhārata gradually disappeared, and in their place a new thought of alliance sprang up, through which the Brahmins gained great success for the re-establishment of their lost power. This great change of character can be easily understood from our story.

In the Purāṇas the conflict between the king and Śakti, which is the cardinal point in the Mahābhārata, is absent, and instead two ogres appear as the originators of the calamity. This is a specially noticeable and important point when compared with the Epic legend.

The quarrel of the two Brahmins in the Epic has great significance. The Epic tells of the Kṣatriyan origin of Viśvāmitra,¹ and his jealous and revengeful character² shows a striking contrast with Vasiṣṭha, who is a pure Brahmin. This indicates also the Epic characteristic. In the Purāṇic story this interlude of the struggle is entirely wanting.

The maxim of the absolute submission of the Kṣatriyas to the Brahmins, the main subject of the Epic story, is never seen in the Purāṇas.

The Purāṇas connect the later apology on Vasiṣṭha's adultery with the main story. In the Bhāgavata this part is specially detailed. This gives, on the one side, a convenient and happy idea for the alliances of the Brahmins and Kṣatriyas, modifying the original motive of the legend.

Among the newly-added factors in the Purāṇic story the etymological explanation of the name Kalmāṣapāda has an interesting parallelism with the Buddhist Avadānas. This will be afterwards fully examined. Some insignificant changes in the story, such as the duration of Madayantī's pregnancy, do not merit special study.

III. ORIGIN OF THE EPIC STORY.

To trace the origin of the Epic legend in the Vedic literature, it would be convenient to treat the whole drama as trilogy, as it was summarized above. The prelude of the story consists of the conflict between Śakti and Kalmāṣapāda, together with the quarrel of the two saints, Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. The second and principal act shows the horrible realization of the curse in the ex-king's devouring the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha. The lamentation of the saint and his attempted self-destruction then follows. The act closes with the emancipation of Kalmāṣapāda. As conclusion, or after-play, the birth of Aśmaka is exhibited. We begin our inquiry with the first act.

² This is clearly seen in the Kalmāṣapāda legend. Muir, quoting a story in the Śalya-parvan, chap. 42, remarks: 'The Mahābhārata has a further legend regarding Viśvāmitra's jealousy of Vasiṣṭha, which again exhibits the former in a very odious light, and as destitute of the moral dispositions befitting a saint, while Vasiṣṭha is represented as manifesting a noble spirit of disinterestedness and generosity (Sanskrit Texts, I., p. 419).

23. The Prototype of the Prelude.—The original materials of the first act of the Epic story can be traced in the Rg-Veda. Sudās, the king of Tṛtsus, who had won a great victory in the famous ‘battle of ten kings,’¹ may be one of the greatest heroes in the Vedic period, having perhaps a historical character.

He is called, also, Paijavana, the son of Pijavana, and occurs several times in the Rg-Veda.² The name Paijavana is found in the later Vedic writings, but it is never mentioned in the Epic or in the Purāṇic literature. This Sudās Paijavana is the original and perhaps historical form of the Epic Kalmāṣapāda.

The relation of three prominent persons in the prelude—Vasiṣṭha, Viśvāmitra, and Śakti—are traceable also in the Vedic writings. An important study regarding these three Vedic saints was published by the late Professor Roth in his famous essay Zur Literatur und Geschichte des Vedas,³ Afterwards Dr. Muir made an admirable collection of almost all materials on this topic, forming chapter iv. in his well-known work Original Sanskrit Texts, vol. i.⁴

The saint Viśvāmitra was once domestic priest of the king Sudās. This is described in the Rg-Veda III. 53.⁵

⁵ Verse 11; Grassmann, I., p. 532.

One of the most important passages on this subject is that of the Br̥haddevatā commenting Rg., III., 33, 3 :

‘The seer’ (Viśvāmitra), ‘going with Sudās—being his domestic priest for the purpose of offering sacrifices—to the confluence of the Vipāś and Śatadrū, addressed these two verses’ (with the words) ‘“be propitious (śam)!”’¹

This work Professor Macdonell, in his excellent edition, judges to be not later than 400 b.c.²

The same story is described in the Nirukta, which is older than the former work, and refers to it when explaining the Rg., VI., 61, 2 : ‘It is explained in the holy tradition : the sage Viśvāmitra was the domestic priest of Sudās, the son of Pijavana. Taking his gains with him, he came to the confluence of the Vipāś and Śatadrū. The others followed (him).’³

The king at the same time patronized Vasiṣṭha, and it seems that he was more influential and more intimate with the king than Viśvāmitra, who appears to have lost his position afterwards, and to have stood against the king in the battle of the ten kings, and for the Bharatas, while Vasiṣṭha, in that case, occupied a very brilliant post on the side of the Tr̥tsus.⁴ His friendship with the king is proved, also, from the Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa. He had delivered holy knowledge to Sudās.⁵ He had brought about the coronation of the king.⁶

The trace of the irreconcilable hostility between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, which forms an important episode in the present act, and is also the main subject of the famous battle story of the two sages in the Epics,⁷ as well as of the Hariścandra legend in the Mārkaṇḍeya-Purāṇa,¹ can be discovered in like manner in the Vedic literature. Professor Oldenberg once maintained that the conflict of the two sages is never seen in the Rg-Veda.² But the verses 21–24 of III. 53 in the Rg-Veda are called Vasiṣṭha-dveśīnyah—‘hating of Vasiṣṭha’—and consist of imprecations and jeers against the sage by commentators.³

A description of the contention is also found in the Taittīriya Saṃhitā,⁴ and the late Professor Roth had judged it to be the struggle between the two races, the Bharatas and Tr̄tsus. The latter he ingeniously identified as the Vasiṣṭha family.⁵

This mutual enmity becomes clearer when we examine the relations between Śakti and Viśvāmitra. This is concisely summed up by Professor Geldner :⁶

‘(1) Śakti, der Sohn des Vasiṣṭha, besiegt in einem Redeturnier den Viśvāmitra und bringt ihn um sein Pr̄estige (Ṣadguruś., ed. Macd., p. 107).⁷

‘(2) Viśvāmitra geht darauf bei Jamadagni in die Lehre und empfängt von ihm eine neue himmlische Redekunst (Ṣadguruś., ibid.).⁸

‘(3) Viśvāmitra rächt sich an Śakti, indem er ihn durch Knechte des Sudās in einem Wald überfallen und verbrennen lässt (Ṣadguruś., zu RV. 7, 32).⁹

⁸ Ibid., p. 107. ‘Śakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha, went to the forest to pluck flowers, etc. On the charge of Viśvāmitra and possessed by Demons, the followers of Sudās assailed the son of Vasiṣṭha and threw him on the fire.’

The first two points are given in the Br̥haddevatā.¹ On the third point the Sarvānukramaṇī gives a short notice explaining the Rg., VII., 32, with the comment that a hemistich of the verse 26 was uttered by Śakti, when he was being burnt.²

Thus we find very clearly the original stuff for the prelude of the later Kalmāṣapāda drama, as the late Professor Roth already hinted.³

Saudāsa, the followers of Sudās, killed Śakti, stirred up by Viśvāmitra. But the Epic changed the original meaning of the word, and took it for the son of Sudāsa. The innocent Tr̥tsus king himself became, therefore, guilty of the murder of Vasiṣṭha's son. The Epic gave a new dress to the old tradition of the struggle between the two sages, Viśvāmitra keeping his odious character as an instigator.

Nothing, however, is found in the Vedic literature to explain the origin of the name Kalmāṣapāda. We must be content to await the future results of patient study.⁴

⁴ The solution of the problem may depend upon whether the name has some connection with Kalmāṣadamyā, a city in the Kuru land, or not. This city is never mentioned in the Brahmanic literature, but it is one of the most famous places in the Buddhist Scriptures, and several important Sūtras in the Samyutta, Majjhima, and Dīgha, were there preached. (See Rhys Davids's 'Buddhist India,' p. 27.) In the Chinese Madhyama-Āgama this place is transliterated as Ken-ma-shih-don, which is equivalent to the Pāli Kammāsadamma (Madhy., fasc. 20, 10, 18, 24, 26). In the Samyukta-Āgama it is called 'the city where spotted cattle are tamed.' This is simply a translation of Kalmāṣadamyā (fasc. 9, 12, 13). In the Chinese Mahānidāna-sūtra of the Dīgha Āgama, we find 'the place where Kalmāṣa is living,' which may be restored to Kalmāṣasthāna, or even to Kalmāṣapada. As the king Sudās might be supposed to have had certain influence upon the ancient Kuru land, the capital of which was Indraprastha—the modern Delhi, in the Buddha's time—it is not unreasonable to conjecture that he had some connection with this city. Perhaps he had governed it, or, in other ways, had certain relations with it. The etymological explanation of the name Kammāsadamma in the Pāli Sutasoma-jātaka belongs doubtlessly to a modern invention, but does this not give some hint as to the connection of Kalmāṣapāda with the place?

24. Original Materials for the Second Act.—We will now proceed to investigate the origin of the second and main act. In the Mahābhārata, the curse on the king is first uttered by Śakti, whom he afterwards devoured. But in the Vedic writings the imprecation is spoken by Vasiṣṭha, because his sons were destroyed by the followers of the king. We read this in the Taittirīya-Saṃhitā:¹

‘Vasiṣṭha, when his son had been slain, prayed, “May I obtain offspring; may I overcome the Saudāsas.” He beheld this ekasmānnapañcāśa,² he took it, and sacrificed with it. In consequence he obtained offspring, and overcame the Saudāsas.’

A similar passage is found in the Kauṣītakī-Brāhmaṇa:³

‘Vasiṣṭha, when his son had been slain, prayed, “May I be fruitful in offspring and cattle, and overcome Saudāsas.” He beheld this form of offering, the Vasiṣṭha-sacrifice; and having performed it, he overcame the Saudāsas.’

Both passages are very obscure, but they clearly point to vengeance projected by Vasiṣṭha against the followers of Sudās, who had slain Śakti.

In the Br̥haddevatā the curse of Vasiṣṭha on the king is distinctly mentioned.⁴ The passage runs :

Another conjecture, which seems more plausible than the former, is an attempt to derive it purely from Buddhist origin. It is not impossible to think that the Buddhist invented a name Kalmāṣapāda from an association with the famous place in the Scriptures, bearing such a rare and curious name as Kalmāṣadamya. The author of the Epic borrowed this from the Buddhists and connected it with Sudās. This solves the question also why the name never occurs in the Vedic writings.

³ Lindner's ed., p. 16, IV., 6.

⁴ Macdonell's ed., VI., 34; Text, p. 37; Transl., p. 217. In the Manu, VIII., 110 (S.B.E., XXV., p. 273), Vasiṣṭha was accused by Viśvāmitra, and had to take an oath before the king in order to clear himself, after the commentary of Kullūka. Here the commentary gives the name Sudāman for Sudās. If this be right reading, the transcription So-da-ma in the Saṃgharakṣa-samuccaya is very interesting.

'Vasiṣṭha was at the time pained, as his hundred sons had been slain by Sudās, who, in consequence of a curse, had been transformed into a demon (rakṣas). Such is the sacred tradition.'

The fiction belongs to a more modern date than the above-given legend, and the gradual change of the subject, on which the Epic is based, may be obviously noticed. Thus the curse in the Epic was at first not on the king, but on his followers. In the Br̥haddevatā it was transferred to the king. The later cannibal story is here in its primitive form.

A passage in Manu's Law-book seems to have some reference to the Br̥haddevatā, as the name Sudās Pajavana is mentioned. But its lateness will be soon recognized from its enumeration of Epic or Purāṇic kings, such as Vaṇa, Nemi, Nahuṣa.¹

The lamentation of Vasiṣṭha over the tragical fate of his sons has its prototype in the Vedic writings, as quoted above. There is another interesting modification of the story in the Epic. We read of Vasiṣṭha's attempts at suicide in the Mahābhārata:²

'Thereupon the great Ṛṣi tied himself with very strong cords and fell in his grief into the waters of that great river. O chastiser of hostile ranks, the river, having torn those cords and making him free of them, cast him on to the land. Having been freed from the cords, the great Ṛṣi rose up and gave that river the name of Vipāś.³ Being oppressed with grief, that Ṛṣi could not from that time stay in one place. He went to the mountains, rivers, and lakes. Seeing once more the river Haimavatī of formidable appearance and full of fierce animals, the Ṛṣi threw himself into the waters. That best of rivers, thinking the Brah-

mana to be fire, immediately fled away in a hundred different streams, and thence was she called the Śatadrū.¹

Compare this passage with those of the Nirukta II., 24, and Bṛhaddevatā, IV., 106, given above. Here the poet of the Epic has transformed the story of Viśvāmitra in the Vedic writings into an etymological fiction, explaining the names of the two rivers. The track of this recasting can be easily followed in the text above quoted.

The third act, the conclusion, is a pure Epic invention, showing its characteristic tendency. In the Vedic period the later sharp distinction between Brahmins and Kṣatriyas never existed, as the author of the 'History of Ancient India' proves with patriotic eloquence,² and it is simply impossible to suppose such an abused supremacy of the Brahmin as the Madayantī-legend.

Parāśara, the grandson of Vasiṣṭha, born to Adṛṣyantī, is mentioned in the Rg-Veda as one member of the Vasiṣṭha family.³ In the Nirukta he is said to be the son of Vasiṣṭha.⁴ The Epic introduces him as a character in the conclusion. He plays there no insignificant part, being a philosopher and moral teacher.⁵

IV. THE RELATION OF BUDDHIST AND NON-BUDDHIST LITERATURES TO THE KALMĀṢAPĀDA LEGEND.

25. The Vedic Influence on the Buddhist Legend.—The simplest form of the Kalmāṣapāda legend, as we have seen in the Old Samuyaktāvadāna, takes on the independent nature of a Jātaka story. It appears simply as one of those primitive forms of the birth stories, which are found in the bas-reliefs on the Bharhut Stūpa.¹ The king, the Rākṣasa, the begging Brahmin, and truthfulness of speech as the didactic nucleus of the story, are quite common figures in the ancient birth-stories. Here we cannot naturally trace any Brahmanic influence. But when the gradual development gave their names to the king and the Rākṣasa, and the episode of the captivity of the hundred kings was introduced, some faint traces of that influence are visible. These traces are, however, so slight that we cannot be so positive as to their origin, as was the case in the Epic.

The name of Sutasoma seems to suggest some influence from the Vedic Sudāś tradition. The colloquial meaning of this word is the pressing of the Soma—one of the most important cults in the Vedic age—and the word is often used in the Rg-Veda.² A son of Bhīma in the Mahābhārata, is called Sutasoma, this meaning being adopted.³ The hero of the battle of the ten kings, Sudāś, has a special connection with this ceremony. We read this in the Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa : ‘This portion was further told by Vasiṣṭha to Sudāś, the son of Pijavana. All these became great, in consequence of their having drunk the Soma in this way, and were great kings. Just as the sun sends forth warmth, so the king, who when sacrificing, drinks the Soma in this way, is placed amidst good fortune, and shines everywhere; in all directions, expecting tribute, his kingdom becomes strong, and is not to be shaken.’

In the part of Kalmāṣapāda, the Buddhist take the dark side of Sudās in the same manner as the Epic poets. The cannibalism of the king as a Rāksasa is found in the Br̥haddevatā, as already mentioned. The captivity of the hundred kings suggests a transformation of the destruction of the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha by the king.

³ Ādi, 223, 81. The Pāli Jātaka takes the name also in this sense : ‘From his fondness for pressed soma-juice they called him Sutasoma’ (Francis, V., p. 246). The Jātakamālā takes the sense in a different way : ‘His father gave the name of Sutasoma because he looked as lovely as Soma (the Moon-god)’ (Speyer, p. 292).

Thus the older Buddhist legend of Kalmāṣapāda has a common source, with the Epic, in the Vedic writings. From this source they developed in two different ways without mutual influence, like other examples, such as the Śivi,¹ R̥ṣyaśringa,² and Daśaratha³ stories, or like certain verses in the Dhammapada.⁴ The motives for the adaptations of the story by Buddhist and Brahmin, however, are quite opposite. The Brahmins adopted the Sudās story with the political aim of proving the superiority of the priesthood against the warriors, while the Buddhists employed it for the purely religious object of teaching their moral doctrine of truthfulness.

Thus we have ground to assume that the bright side, the triumphant character, of Sudās was taken as the name of the hero in the Buddhist legend. If this connection with Sudās is not admissible, it will at least be obvious that the name has an origin in Vedic thought for some great and mighty king. The meaning of the name Phumiñ,⁵ which may be rendered as Samantaprabhāsa or Samantaraśmin, is a well-known characteristic of the Soma in the R̥g-Veda.⁶ If it be possible to take the Sanskrit form of Phumiñ as Subhās or Subhāsa, this would give a strong support to the connection of Sudās and Sutasoma, for this Subhās is only a slight paleographical or phonetic change of Sudās.

The capturing of Sutasoma by the demon with two wings¹ reminds us of the famous story in the Rg-Veda of the rape of the Soma.² The supernatural power of the Rākṣasa to go through the air is often described in the old Buddhist writings, but this special form, possessing two wings, is very rare, and it is a highly noticeable fact.

26. The Epic Influence.—In the later form of the Kalmāṣapāda legend the Buddhists received a considerable influence from the Mahābhārata. The name Saudāsa in the Śimhasaudāsa-sūtra and in the first translation of the Laṅkāvatāra reveals this very clearly. This Epic name is never found in the older Chinese Avadānas or in the Pāli Jātakas. Perhaps they were compiled when the name of Saudāsa was not yet taken as an individual name of Kalmāṣapāda, but as in the Nirukta, or in the Sarvānu-kramanī, to mean the followers of Sudās. In the Damamū-kāvadāna we see a new and important factor in the Kalmāṣapāda story, which is entirely ignored by the other texts. This relates to the explanation of the question why Kalmāṣapāda became a cannibal. The author of the Avadāna borrowed here a characteristic and common factor in the Epic—the curse—with some modifications. The immediate efficacy of a curse is a favourite and accustomed technic of the Epic poets to bring into relief the great powers of their saints, who are mostly revengeful and irritable, rather abusing their power of cursing. Thus curse-stories may be reckoned as, at least, one of the Epic characteristics, if not the most important one. In the Buddhist writings, practically teaching mildness and patience, and theoretically expounding strict causality, the curse and its immediate efficacy as the material of a story are not so familiar.

The sage in the Avadāna, who, by cursing the king for his gift of improper food, causes him to become a cannibal, is only a modified copy of the Brahmin in the Mahābhārata.

In the Epic Kalmāṣapāda gives human flesh to that Brahmin through his intelligence being bewildered by the curse, while in the Avadāna some meat is offered to the sage, who never eats flesh, apparently showing his Buddhist character. This is the only difference ; the central point of the curse is identical. The construction of the utterance of the curse in the two texts is also strikingly analogous.

*Because that worst of kings

Two royal wives struggling for the love of their lord are recast from the two Brahmins quarrelling for the position of royal preceptor. Like the latter case, in which the enmity of the Brahmins serves as the remote cause of Kalmāṣapāda's fall, in the former the struggle of the two ladies indirectly involves the king in disaster. An important point of this recasting is traceable in the fact that the Avadāna is describing these two ladies, one as a Kṣatriyā and the other as a Brahminee by birth. This shows the original characters of Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra in the Epic, respectively representing the Brahmin and the Kṣatriya.

The early Buddhist story of Sutasoma, on the other hand, seems to have had some influence upon the Mahābhārata. In the Uttanika episode, which was manifestly composed after the main story in the Ādi-parvan, a Buddhist tendency is clearly perceptible. This means the truthfulness specified by Uttanika as the characteristic virtue of a Brahmin, and his promise to return again to the cannibal king as his victim after the fulfilment of his duty. Does this not vividly show an imitation of Sutasoma and his ethics ?³ A passage in the Karna-parvan, suggesting

27. The Avadānas and Purāṇas.—The Avadānas in the second group bear a curious parallelism with the Purāṇas in giving an etymological explanation of the name Kalmāṣapāda. This tendency is already appearing in the Mahābhārata, as in the examples of Aśmaka, Parāśara,¹ Sutasoma, and many others. The etymology of the rivers Vipāś and Śatadrū belongs to the same favourite method of the Epic poets. The Buddhists and Purāṇic writers inherited this psychological tendency of the Epic period, and employed it in the name Kalmāṣapāda, making out a fiction of the pedal deformity of the king, who in the Mahābhārata is described as having perfect beauty,² and on his body no such defect as spotted feet.

The Buddhists explain the name from a priori grounds based on their Karmatic causality, ascribing the malformation of the king's feet to an inheritance from his lioness mother.

The Purāṇic writers, on the other hand, connect the name with the ritual efficacy, assuming an a posteriori ground of the pedal defect: the holy water cursed by the king caused the stigmata upon the feet. The characteristic contrast of the fiction in the Avadānas and Purāṇas would show the difference of these two religious ideas. In this part we cannot perceive the mutual relation of the two literatures, for it is a result of the common inheritance of the Epic thought. But in one phase of conformity between the Purāṇas and the Damamukhavadāna may not be merely an accidental coincidence.

We have seen already that in the Avadāna the temple-god, provoked by the demolition of his temple by the queen ment, once more come back to you and put myself under your power. I assure you truly of this. There is no falsehood in this. Never before have I spoken any falsehood, no, not even in jest! What shall I say then of other occasions?' (XIV., 57, 9-10; Dutt, XIV., p. 67).

² Ādi, 179, 40: 'The king, most handsome of all handsome men.'

of Kalmāṣapāda, assumes the form of the sage and deceives the king into giving the sage flesh-meat. In the Purāṇas the transformation is done in a more complicated manner than in the Avadāna. The Rākṣasa, intending vengeance, takes at first the shape of Vasiṣṭha, and afterwards transforms himself into the royal cook in order to dress human flesh. Here the reciprocal relation cannot be doubted. It is, however, very difficult to decide which of the two was influenced by the other. But from the character of the Damamūkāvadāna, which assimilates almost all factors of the Kalmāṣapāda legend, both in the Buddhist and Brahmanic literature, and which, from the date of its compilation, apparently belongs to a later period, the Purāṇic influence upon it may be conjectured.

The ideality of the duration of the curse—twelve years of cannibalism in both stories—does not here deserve special notice, for this term is used always in the Epic and Buddhist works for asceticism, punishment, or other things.¹ The accidental agreement is rather a natural consequence.

28. Jain Legend of Kalmāṣapāda.—The story is not wanting in the Jaina-literature, as Professor Leumann has already noticed.² It may properly be dealt with here. The following is the entire German translation of the story in the Āvaśyaka-niryukti³ by Professor Leumann, who kindly supplied it at my request:

‘Der König Saudāsa liebte es, Fleisch zu essen. Einmal war eine Schlachtung. Da wurde das Fleisch durch eine Katze gestohlen. Nun wollte man bei den Metzgern Fleisch holen, bekam aber keines. So nahmen die Leute ein Kind, das sie töteten und zubereiteten. Als der König

Einige Erzähler sagen, er habe draussen in der Einsamkeit (nicht an einem von Menschen viel begangenen Kreuzweg) Leute getötet.'

The patronymic name of the king is the same as in the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas. But beside this, there is no similarity with those versions. It is more like the Buddhist Avadānas.

This comparison shows that the Jain story must be derived from the same source as the Buddhist Avadāna, as in the case of the Citta and Sambhūta Jātakas.¹ The naïveté of the Jain story, however, suggests its priority as against the Buddhist writings, for the latter added the lioness story and invented the characteristic name Simhasaudāsa.

V. THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE KALMĀṢAPĀDA-STORY IN BUDDHIST LITERATURE.

29. The two Periods of the Development.—The two groups of the texts above classified represent at the same time the two main periods of the literary development, the prelude of the lioness-myth being a mark of the whole study. The development in the first period consisted in the gradual addition of new factors to the primitive story. These factors were, however, always Buddhistic. Vedic traces are faint, and of the Saudāsa legend in the Mahābhārata there is scarcely a vestige of influence. So this may also be called the period of internal development. The highest point of this period is reached in the Mahāsutasoma-jātaka.

The second period is characterized by external influence. Here Epic elements were largely interwoven with the story. The various tendencies in the first period are combined into unity. It is, therefore, also a period of the synthesis. The highest development of this period is represented by the Damamūkāvadāna.

A. THE FIRST PERIOD.

30. The First Form.—The missionary San-hwi from Samarkand translated two different forms of the Sutasoma-jātaka in A.D. 251. Among them text 10 preserves a more primitive form than the other. If it is not the oldest form of the story, still, from its simple structure, it may be admitted to be nearly the original Jātaka. It teaches nothing but one simple moral, as in the oldest Birth-stories.

Text 13 is the collection of stories by Saṅgharakṣa, who is alleged to have been contemporary with King Kaniska. This tradition may be justified by the fact that another work of Saṅgharakṣa was translated by Si-kao of Parthia, who came to China in A.D. 148.¹

¹ N., no. 1126. The complete text was translated by Dharmarakṣa in A.D. 284. This is found in N., no. 1325. The Sanskrit of the title

The story in the text is more detailed than the older Samyuktāvadāna, and its connection with the Vedic writings, or, at least, with the current Vedic thought, is traceable from the name of the hero, Sutasoma. But the central point of the story remained unchanged, consisting only of a simple lesson in truthfulness.

About one century after the victorious Scythian ruler, the famous Nāgārjuna¹ wrote his commentary on the Pañcavimśatisāhasrikā (text 15). At that time the story possessed already a new factor—viz., the captivity of one hundred kings. The author takes this story as an example of the Śila-pāramitā, like text 11. That the commentary refers to the story as a separate Sūtra suggests a certain enlargement of its contents. This Sūtra may be perhaps the original form of the Phumiṇ-Sūtra, collected by the compiler of text 11.

This text (15) inculcates nothing beyond the one simple moral taught in the above two texts. The Brahmin appears here, as in former texts, only to beg alms, while in the others he plays a great rôle in the preaching of the four stanzas. These two points are sufficient to betray their priority as against the remaining texts.

31. The Second Form.—The second form is characterized work, ‘Caryāmārgabhūmi,’ rendered by Dr. Nanjo, is not right. The true original title is given in the preface of No. 1325. Yogacaryābhūmi-sūtra, which means in the Tsin language Sin-hhiṇ-tao-ti-king (T.E., XIX., 6, 35b). Perhaps the famous work by Asamga with the similar title, Yogācāryabhūmi, has some relation with our old text. The contents of the Nos. 1325 and 1326 are compared as follows:

by its manysidedness or plurality of didactic subject-matter, developed, on the one side, through the Buddhistic dignifying of the begging Brahmin, and, on the other, through the personal elevation of Sutasoma. The Brahmin, who is coming simply to beg alms in the last three texts, now teaches the Buddhist doctrine. He utters the four stanzas in texts 1, 11, and 12. In text 16, he is transformed into a Buddhist high priest, and beside the stanzas, expounds the Prajñāpāramitā. Sutasoma delivers the man-eater only through his truthful conduct, which belongs to the first form. The texts give him nothing of the eminent character of a Bodhisattva, but only simple morality. But we see a quite different figure of him in texts 1, 11, 12, and 16. His complete knowledge of the Buddhist dogmas in text 12, his great eloquence and sagacity in converting the cannibal king in text 1, lends him a holiness like that of the Buddha. This moral perfection reaches its climax in the Mahāsutasoma-jātaka (text 1). In consequence of these characteristic changes the plurality of the central point must necessarily follow.

We will go a few steps further to search for the development on this side. The oldest date we can assign to this second form is text 11, which was translated in A.D. 251. In that version, the elevated character of Sutasoma was not yet so pronounced as in text 1. His skilful treatment for conversion is there undreamt of. The four boons, so important in text 1, were also entirely ignored.

These two leading factors became familiar only in the time of Ārya Śūra, who may be supposed to have lived at the end of the fourth century.¹ Thus it is not impossible to think that the Mahāsutasoma-jātaka was complete as to its main construction during some one century, between the time of San-hwi and that of Ārya Śūra, and that afterwards its present form was gradually completed, perhaps in the age of Buddhaghosa, when the literary activity of the Pāli language was in full blast. This gradual completion of the present form may be easily proved by the name Kalmāṣapāda being obsolete in the main part of the Jātaka, and remaining only in an insignificant corner of the story. Some ancient expressions in the narrative, such as 'the three Vedas,' or a description of Taksasilā as a centre of learning, belong rather to ordinary Pāli usage, and imitates only the ancient part of the Birth-story.

The Pāli Jātaka not only agrees with texts 11 and 12 in the main points, but it bears an important resemblance in the subordinate points—for example, the prayer of Kalmāṣapāda to the tree-nymph, and the four stanzas uttered by the Brahmin, give a hint as to the close connection between the Sanskrit and Pāli versions of the story. If the Pāli Jātaka did not develop from the same form as texts 11 and 12, it will have grown out of the nearest form of it that was commonly known in the Buddhist schools in ancient times.

The Jayaddisa-jātaka, which divides the personage of Sutasoma into two parts, and presupposes the existence of text 1, belongs in many points to a later date.

The direct development of the story in text 11 is found in text 16. The adaptation of the story for the purpose of propagating the Prajñāpāramitā doctrine has already been noticed. The text not only borrows the name of the hero from text 11, but it takes the four stanzas verbatim et literatim therefrom. The first Chinese translation of this text, which is no longer extant, was finished by Dharmarakṣa,¹ who visited China in A.D. 266, and continued his work of translation till A.D. 317.² Thus it may be thought that this adaptation was made in the beginning or middle of the third century.

From the traditions given above, and justified by the trustworthy descriptions in the ancient Chinese chronicles, we can determine approximate dates relating to the various stadia of the development in the first period.

The primitive form in this period was probably existing one or two centuries before the Christian era, like other old Birth-stories. This simple story underwent gradual changes, by the accretion of different factors, among Buddhist schools spreading in various localities, and its most developed form was completed about the end of the fourth century :

B. THE SECOND PERIOD.

32. The First Development.—The second period is characterized by the combination of the prelude—i.e., the lioness story—with the Sutasoma-jātaka. This prelude reminds us of the fiction of the lion and princess explaining the origin of the Singhalese people in Yuan-chwang's travels.¹ Perhaps a story of the same kind prevailed in India, and served as a common source to the Avadānas and Singhalese fiction.

In the first development we do not yet find the curse story, which introduces the strong and obvious colouring of the Epic character. The Buddhists had here only combined the patronymic name, Saudāsa, in the Mahābhārata, with the lioness story, and invented a new name—Siṃha-saudāsa.

The oldest form of this development known to us is the text 17A, the first translation of the Lankāvatāra. Before this translation another of the oldest Chinese renderings of this Sūtra was completed by Dharmarakṣa,¹ who worked in China A.D. 433–452.² This is no longer extant. According to the description of catalogues, the size of this lost translation is almost equal³ with Guṇabhadra's version.

Before Dharmarakṣa's translation appeared, this Sūtra was never known to the Chinese Buddhists. In the works of Nāgārjuna existing in China, such as text 15 or the Daśabhūmivibhāṣā,⁴ many important Mahāyāna-sūtras are cited,⁵ but the Lankāvatāra is not found among them. In the second and third translation a prophecy regarding Nāgārjuna is even mentioned.⁶ So the date of the compilation must belong to a comparatively modern period—at least, posterior to the age of Nāgārjuna.⁷

Text 20 may be looked upon as a kind of commentary on the Māṃsabhakṣa-parivarta, the eighth chapter of the Laṅkāvatāra. It explains the example of Siṃhasaudāsa given in the Sūtra in full and poetical form. The supplementary prose on the Śivi-jātaka, which is also found in the ⁵ In the text 15, Saddharma-puṇḍarīka (fascs. 7, 9, 10, 26, 30, 32, etc.), Sukhavatī vyūha (fascs. 9, 22), Avataṃsaka (fascs. 30, 50, 73, 100), Vimalakīrtinirdeśa (fascs. 9, 15, etc.), Śurāngamasamādhi (fascs. 10, 26, etc.), and many others are cited.

⁶ Bodhiruci, chap. 18 (T.E., IV., 6, 71a); Sikṣānanda, chap. 10 (T.E., IV., 6, 114a). O Mahāmati! Know this! In future, after the Sugata left this world, a man will be born in Southern India, protecting my Dharma, as a renowned and virtuous monk, with the name o Nāgārjuna. He will destroy the heretical doctrines of the Realists (Astika) and Nihilists (Nāstika), and propagate my highest Mahāyāna-dharma. He will attain to the Pramuditā stage, and be born in the land of Sukhavatī. R.A.S. MS. 129b 3-5. See Additional Notes.

⁷ Two works commenting on the refutations against heretics and Hīnayānists in the Laṅkāvatāra (N., no. 1259, 1260) are ascribed to Ārya Deva, who is a younger contemporary of Nāgārjuna. The works are translated by the same translator of the text 17 b. Considered from the date of the translation and translator, the ascribed authorship calls for further inquiry.

Sūtra, evidently shows this fact. The connection of the Sūtra with the Jain literature has already been mentioned. According to Professor Leumann, the oldest Niruykti belongs to the first century of the Christian era. The Saudāsa story in the Āvaśyaka may have existed in the fifth century. This gives an important suggestion as to the date of the construction of the Simhasaudāsa legend in Buddhist literature.

Texts 7 and 8 are especially important and interesting, because they combine the Sanskrit and Pāli stories of Sutasoma. As already said, Ārya Śūra, the author of text 7 takes the character of Kalmāṣapāda from the northern tradition, possibly from the Simhasaudāsa-sūtra, while he borrows materials en bloc from the Pāli for the part of Sutasoma.

The work by Kṣemendra, text 8, adopts the former poem with only few modifications.

In these two texts the curse-story of the cannibal king is entirely wanting. The number of the captured princes is only 100 or 101, as in the older Avadānas.

33. The Second Development.—Texts 19 and 21 are the most-developed form of the Kalmāṣapāda story. Not only the Buddhist elements in the various texts are here brought together, but the Epic colouring is conspicuously vivid. As the latter point has been already discussed, we will now consider the former. As has already been pointed out, the story in our text finished its development in Khotan and was brought to Turfan, where the compilation was made. Compared with the Mahāsutasoma-jātaka, the characteristics of the story are sharply contrasted. It is very interesting to see these developments in the two typical lands representing the two main divisions of the Buddhist Church—Khotan and Ceylon.

Firstly, the texts are indebted to text 11 for their foundation-stone. In text 11, as before mentioned, two questions on the former birth of the robber Aṅgulimāla are explained. On the first question—why that cruel robber was converted by the Buddha?—the Avadāna gives the answer in the story of Phumiṇ and the man-eater. Regarding the second question—why Aṅgulimāla had taken so many lives before his conversion?—a supplementary story is told about a sage. In our texts, after the Sutasoma-jātaka, the story of a sage follows directly, just as in text 11, only with some modification and enlargement. There remains, therefore, scarcely any doubt concerning the source of our texts. Further, our text uses the four gāthas in text 11 verbatim et literatim.

Secondly, the texts do not hesitate to borrow the names of hero and adversary from texts 13 and 15. In text 11 the name of the man-eater is wanting, and the hero is called Phumiṇ, not Sutasoma. This fact may be proved from the following parallel passages in the Mahāprajñā-pāramitā-śāstra and our texts:

'They said: "Have never anxiety on account of Kalmāṣapāda. We will build an iron palace guarded by a strong army. Though Kalmāṣapāda has a miraculous power, he deserves not to be feared."

TEXT 21=18.

'Da sprachen die Beamte zu ihm: "Habe keine Furcht vor König Kangta (Kalmāṣapāda); unsere Meinung ist, dass wenn zum Schutze der königlichen Person ein Gebäude von Eisen aufgeführt würde, und der König darin seinen Sitz nähme, Kangta, so stark und mächtig er auch sein mag, nichts vermögen wird."

Thirdly, the texts have some relation to text 14. Here the duration of the twelve years' cannibalism agrees. The description in text 14 is very laconic, and the meaning is not quite intelligible. But it relates to the oath of the king himself, who according to our texts utters a terrible curse on his subjects who try to kill him in the bath.

Fourthly, perhaps our story has some relation to text 16. It is at least positively clear that the compilers of the Damamukāvadānā referred to Kumārajīva's translation of text 16, for the four stanzas in the texts apparently show this fact. The number of the kings captured by Kalmāṣapāda in our story is quite identical with that in text 16.

Fifthly, a most important point is the relation of our texts to texts 17A and 20. Our texts here introduce the lioness-story in the older Laṅkāvatāra, and its enlarged and poetical version in text 20.

The priority over our text of the Sīmhasaudāsa-sūtra, though the date of its translation is considerably later, may be sufficiently proved from the interpolation in the later Laṅkāvatāra mentioned above. If this commentary was written after the interpolated texts, 17 B.C.—that is to say, after the superfluous addition of a new Kalmāṣapāda story like our texts—this suitable and important example for the subject-matter of the Sūtra must be also placed after the supplementary prose on the Sivi-jātaka.

With the texts 1, 6, and 7, our story has no connection. This may probably be due to the geographical position of Khotan being unfavourable for the transmission of the influence.

34. Conclusion.—The study on the Kalmāṣapāda stories touches certain important questions in Indian literatures.

It supplies at least a concrete example for the solution of a question: Which process does the development of a story follow in various literatures?

On the Brahmanic side this study reveals clearly a literary connection between the Vedic writings and the Mahābhārata. We find that an ancient tradition preserved in the Rg-Veda had gradually developed in the Epic and the Purāṇas, taking on quite a different form and character. On the Buddhistic side it contributes still more important results concerning the development of the Birth-stories, manifesting clearly a process of advance from the simplest form to the most elaborate construction. Many important points on the Pāli and Sanskrit Jātakas are also elucidated through it.

The inquiry explains yet another question: What are the conditions necessary for the development of a story? Herein our inquiry is of deep significance for the histories of civilization and religion.

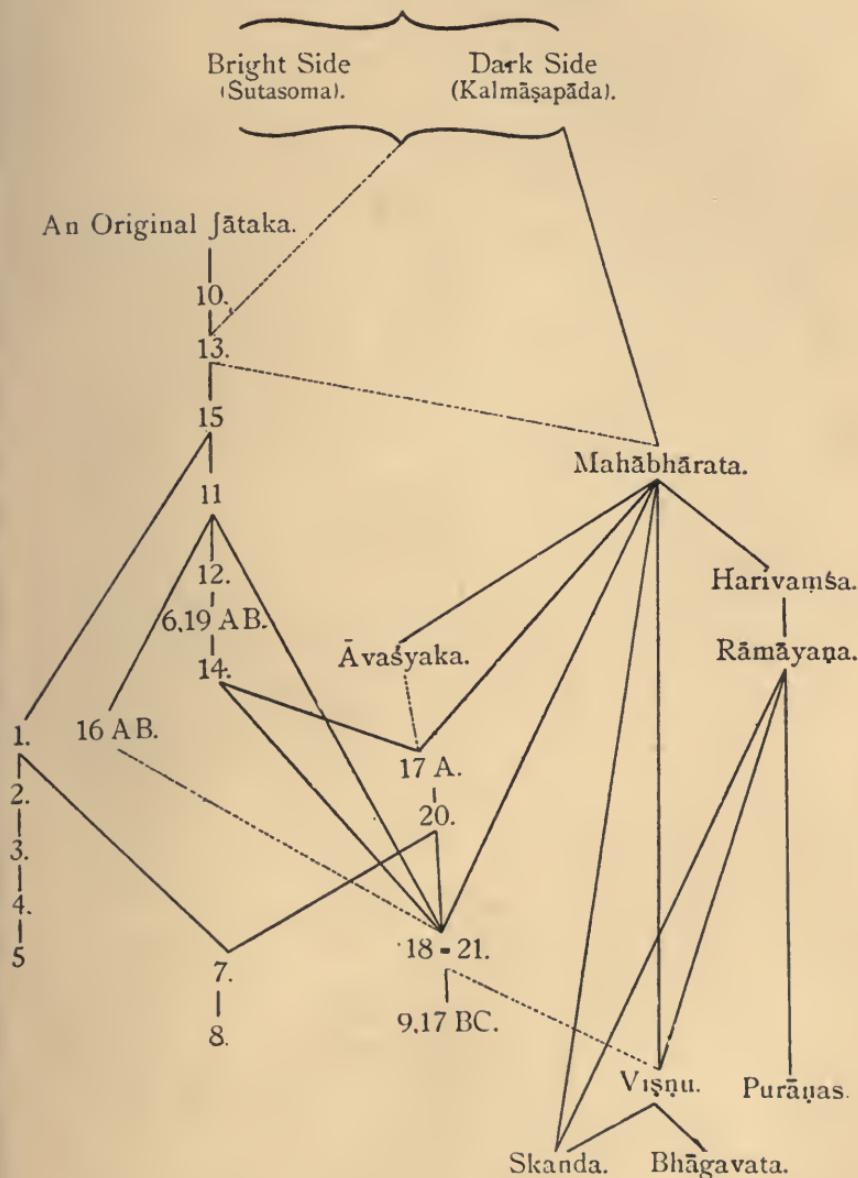

The picture of the priestly supremacy in the Epic period in contrast with the heroic age of the Rg-Veda is thrown into high relief by such a study. The incidental implications of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas may as to culture be also observed. The characteristic differences of Brahmanism and Buddhism in the story are of interest. The tendencies of the Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna may be obviously seen. The Ceylonese Hīnayānists, who were always of a conservative character, have completed a development of the story with pure Buddhistic elements, while the progressive Khotan Mahāyānists received considerable external influence from the Brahmanic literature, showing their customary facility for assimilation.¹

The result of the whole study is schematized as follows :

In a commentary on the Dharmapada, Avadāna-sūtra (Nanjio, No. 1321), fasc. 25 (T.E. xxiv., 6, 35a–b), a different version of the Kalmāṣapāda story is found. The story serves as an example to verse 38 of the Pāpa-varga (Udānavarga XXVIII., v. 41; W. W. Rockhill's translation, p. 140). Its epitome is as follows:—Once a cannibal demon ruled as king. He caught ninety-nine kings for his victims. The poor kings complained to the demon that they would not regret dying if he could only capture Sunakṣatra (or Surāśi, good constellation, 善宿), who was a king practising the deeds of the Bodhisattva. The cannibal king agreed, and sent forth his demon army to take Sunakṣatra captive. A Brahmin went abroad to study, leaving all his relatives at home. When he returned after his long journey he could not find them, and learnt that they were confined to prison for debt to their king. The Brahmin begged Sunakṣatra for help. The merciful king consented to his petition and then went to bathe. Thereupon the demon army captured the king and brought him to the cannibal king, who allowed him to go only to fulfil his promise to the Brahmin, and on the condition of his duly returning. When Sunakṣatra faithfully returned he uttered a gāthā (Udānavarga XXVIII., ver. 41), to the surprise and admiration of the demon, who was at once converted, and set free the ninety-nine kings, giving up his own kingdom to Sunakṣatra.

Vorbemerkung.

Alles was über Sinn und Anlage dieser Gāthā-Konkordanz zu wissen nötig ist, habe ich im Vorwort zur Suttanipāta-Konkordanz ZDMG. 63. 1ff. und im Vorwort zur Vinaya-Konkordanz WZKM. XXIV auseinandergesetzt, worauf ich der Kürze wegen verweise.

Es ist mir an dieser Stelle Bedürfnis, dankbar auszusprechen, daß ohne das Vorhandensein der Veröffentlichungen der Pāli Text Society diese Konkordanz kaum denkbar gewesen wäre. Und unter denselben wieder ist Rhys Davids-E. Carpenter's Ausg. von D. I und II eine der wichtigsten Grundlagen dieser Untersuchung.

ABBREVIATIONS OF TITLES OF PALI BOOKS

PROFESSOR LANMAN, in the proceedings of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences for 1907, has proposed a modification of the scheme of abbreviations published in this Journal in 1896, with the object of receiving the suggestions of Pali scholars on this question. The proposal is to have one letter for each of the four great Nikāyas; two letters for each book in the fifth, the Khuddaka Nikāya; three letters for the Vinaya, and for each book of the Abhidhamma; and four letters for each of the later books. This is both practical and easy to remember; and it will be adopted for this Journal, and for use in the forthcoming edition of the Pali Dictionary.

It is suggested that the commentaries, when they come eventually to be published, should be referred to, not by their names, but as the commentary on such and such a canonical text, naming the text; thus D. cm., or DA, instead of Sumv., for Sumangala-vilāsinī; and Dhs. cm., or DhsA, instead of Asln, for Attha-sālinī.
